The scribes loved to dispute about which was the greatest of the 613 commandments which they recognized. Jesus astonished them by referring to the passage of Scripture most familiar to the Jews (Deut. 6:4, 5), which declares the unity and absolute exclusiveness of the Lord our God. It may be well for us to stress this truth even in our time, for most folk regard the worship and service of God as optional.

III. The Christian Citizen Loves His Neighbor (vv. 31-34).

The scribe did not ask for the second commandment but Jesus presents it as an unavoidable corollary of the first. The man who really loves God will love his neighbor.

Every social injustice would be wiped out and every cause for strife removed if all men loved their fellow-man as they love themselves. Such a condition will never prevail, however, until men love God. It is too much for the flesh to put others before self. Only the grace of God is sufficient for that. Hence the real solution of the problems of capital and labor, the "haves" and the "have nots" is to win the men and women on both sides of the struggle to a true love for God through Jesus Christ our Lord. In other words, we come again to the inevitable conclusion that what our nation needs is a revival.

Social panaceas, revolution either by force or by law, dictatorships, all these are destined to failure. Men must learn to know and love God supremely and thus come to love their neighbors as themselves.

The crossroad Sunday-school teacher, the missionary in the city slums, the preacher of the gospel, whether in the great city or on the countryside, the faithful Christian living out the love of Christ daily in kindly word and deed—these are the real forces for social as well as spiritual good. Let us do all we can to prosper their ministry!

Summer Afternoon Dresses

THESE two patterns bring you outstanding fashions of the season, the woman's dress very slenderizing and flattering, the little girl's frock as saucy, bright and perky as a daffodil. Each pattern includes a detailed and complete sew chart, with step-by-step directions, so that you can make these pretty dresses quickly and easily.

Bolero Frock for Little Girl.
This dress has no less than four of the most becoming details in the world—a crisply flaring skirt, sleeves puffed out like little balloons, a brief bolero, and a round collar! Make it up in printed percale (a light, flowery design), paper taffeta, gingham, linen or dimity. Use ricrac or Irish edging to trim the collar and bolero.

Soft Detailing for Large Women.
Notice the soft gather on the shoulders and sleeve tops, creating just enough fullness where it's needed, the lengthening revers, the slim lines of the skirt—all extremely becoming to women who want to minimize their weight. This dress will be lovely in silk print, georgette, chiffon or voile. If you choose a print, be sure to select small or indirect designs.

WHAT TO EAT and WHY ★ ★ ★

C. Houston Goudiss Noted Food Authority

Describes the ACID- and ALKALINE-ASH FOODS and Explains Their Role in Maintaining the ACID-BASE BALANCE of the Body ★ ★ ★

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th Street, New York City.

ACIDITY is the topic of the hour. On every side we hear people complaining that they have too much acid in their systems, that they suffer from acid stomach, acid headaches, acid mouth, acidosis. In fact, most adults fancy themselves victims of a great battle between acid and alkaline forces, with the acid having the better of it.

They confuse gastric acidity—which is entirely normal, for the healthy stomach is always strongly acid—with the potential acidity of foods which leave an acid residue following digestion. And many of them are convinced that they should take drastic steps to overcome the danger of acidosis.

The Vogue of Acidosis

There are fashions in disease, just as in dress, home furnishings and automobiles. Ten years ago, we heard much about the evils of auto-intoxication, and it was some time before people realized that they had been misled by the extreme claims of those who had some sort of remedy to sell. And now it is acidosis that is the most talked of complaint. Friends caution one another against this or that food, with the mistaken idea that it causes or aggravates an acid condition. Food faddists have frightened thousands by suggesting that acidosis is brought about by mixing various kinds of foods.

Health Endangered

Indeed, we have come to a point where the fear of a so-called acid condition is assuming proportions which indicate the possibility of real trouble unless the American people get the true facts and put aside these foolish delusions.

Physiologists believe that fear and worry have a detrimental effect on digestion, and, in turn, on the general health. Thus eating meals in constant fear of acidity may upset the digestion and bring about the very symptoms that you are trying to avoid. One well-known authority contends that perhaps 90 per cent of digestive distress, attributed to the kind or combinations of food eaten, is actually due to unfavorable mental or emotional states, and other causes such as over-eating, even when fatigued, or consuming at one meal too many foods that are difficult to digest. It, therefore, becomes apparent that thousands of people are contributing to their own discomfort as a result of fear, ignorance, or a blind belief in misleading claims which are opposed to scientific facts.

Acidosis Uncommon

The danger is not from acidosis, but from the fear of this bugbear, and from self medication in the belief that certain remedies are required to overcome a fancied condition. For in spite of the large amount of acid produced in metabolism, the blood normally remains remarkably constant and slightly alkaline, due to a highly efficient buffer system.

Perhaps you wonder, if this is so, why doctors and dietitians talk so much about the acid-base balance.

The Acid-Base Balance

To understand this phrase, you must know that every food leaves an ash when burned in the body, just as ashes remain when coal or wood is burned in a furnace. In the body, the ash consists of valuable minerals which are required in large amounts to maintain optimal health.

Some foods, such as meat, fish, eggs and cereals, leave an acid ash because the predominating minerals are phosphorus, chlorine and sulphur. Other foods, chiefly milk and most fruits and vegetables, leave an alkaline ash because the remaining minerals are principally calcium, magnesium, potassium and sodium. These are the base-forming foods.

Besides the alkaline ash and acid ash foods, there is a group of foods, including sugar, cornstarch and purified fats, which are so highly refined that no minerals remain after they are burned; and some other foods, such as butter and cream, leave a balance of the two types of ash. These are known as neutral foods.

Cannot Trust Your Tongue

The sense of taste cannot be relied upon as a guide in determining which foods are acid and which alkaline. For example, cereals, which are bland to the taste, have an acid reaction following digestion. Bread, likewise, is acid forming, although you would not suspect that fact from its taste. On the other hand, potatoes, though somewhat similar to bread in flavor and food value, are one of our most valuable alkaline foods, and dried lima beans are the most highly alkaline of any food known.

If it seems curious that such bland foods should have an acid ash, you may find it even harder to believe that oranges, lemons, grapefruit, peaches and tomatoes, which taste acid in the mouth, leave an alkaline ash following digestion. But the fact is that the body performs a clever bit of chemical engineering and the final effect on the blood is alkaline.

Homemaker's Responsibility

A balanced diet must include sufficient base-forming foods to neutralize and counter-balance the effects of the acids formed in metabolism.

That is one reason why it is so important for the homemaker to provide her family with plenty of milk, fruits and vegetables, in addition to the necessary meat, fish, eggs and cereals.

In general, one is likely to feel better when base-forming foods predominate, at least slightly, in the diet over acid-forming foods. Some authorities believe that this

Have You a Question?

Ask C. Houston Goudiss

C. Houston Goudiss has put at the disposal of readers of this newspaper all the facilities of his famous Experimental Kitchen Laboratory in New York City. He will gladly answer questions concerning foods, diet, nutrition, and their relation to health. You are also invited to consult him in matters of personal hygiene. It's not necessary to write a letter unless you desire, for post-card inquiries will receive the same careful attention. Address him at 6 East 39th Street, New York City.

may be due not so much to their effect on the acid-base balance as to the fact that they provide such splendid amounts of vitamins, minerals and fiber.

However, one must not make the mistake of becoming so enthusiastic over building a highly alkaline diet that one overlooks good foods necessary to round out a balanced diet.

To those homemakers who take seriously the important job of feeding a family, and wish to be correctly informed, I shall gladly send a chart showing which foods are alkaline and which acid. It can be used as a helpful guide in planning a balanced diet.

Send for this chart and increase your food knowledge. In the meantime, don't under any circumstances allow misguided individuals to frighten you into joining the vast army of acid-minded people who are so concerned over the possibilities of acidosis that they haven't time to enjoy life.

Questions Answered

Mrs. R. McK.—Generally speaking, the ideal weight for men and women over thirty is their normal weight at the age of thirty. From that time on, the scales should be watched, and the food intake reduced as soon as a gain is noticed. When maturity is reached, food is no longer required to support growth, and unless muscular activity is maintained at a high level, the total energy requirement will gradually decline.

Miss M. V.—Indeed I am not against the eating of fried foods, except in abnormal conditions where, for some reason, the fat intake must be restricted. The moderate use of fried foods, which have been properly cooked, makes the diet palatable and interesting.

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. I have rented my 80-acre farm for shares to an operator who in the past few years has been operating it in connection with his own farm. Can these two tracts of land be considered as one farm in 1938?

A. These two farms may be combined and considered as one farm for performance in 1938 if you and your tenant sign the necessary form and the county committee approves the same.

Q. If my 80-acre farm is combined with my tenants own farm and all of the corn which is planted on these two tracts is planted on the operator's own farm, how will my corn payment be figured?

A. If all the corn planted to fill the corn allotment for these two tracts of land which have been combined as one farm is planted on the operator's own farm, you will receive no corn payment.

Q. I own one farm and have rented another one for cash and have my crop rotation system established on these two farms. How can I have these combined?

A. You must sign an ACP-68 and file with the county committee before June 30, 1938

Q. I am operating my own farm and am renting a pasture which is a part of my neighbor's farm. I expect to comply in the maximum on my own farm. If my neighbor exceeds his allotment to the point where the deductions are greater than the benefit payments, will any part of the deduction be carried to my own farm?

A. Since you are renting only pasture land and are not contributing to the over-planting of the soil-depleting crops on your neighbor's farm, no deduction would be made from the payments upon your farm.

Q. When I received my notice from the county office, I found that I have 100 acres total soil-depleting allotment. I have 60 acres corn allotment. Does that mean that I could plant 60 acres of corn and 100 acres of other depleting crops and receive maximum payments?

A. No. You would deduct your corn allotment, leaving 40 acres for other depleting crops. Of course if you wish to plant less than 60 acres of corn you can have a corresponding increase in other depleting crops.

Q. I only have 10 head of livestock, but I am pasturing 20 acres of oats. What must I do if the cattle do not pasture sufficiently close to prevent grain formation?

A. It will be absolutely necessary that you prevent grain formation on these oats if you are expecting them to be classified as non-depleting, for if grain forms your 20-acre tract would be considered as depleting.

Shower Held For Bride-To-Be

Miss Ethel Barz, who will soon become the bride of Mr. Edmund Josten, was honored at a shower at the Lena Schroeder home Friday evening, May 20.

Three Klemme Seniors Given Honor Awards At Commencement

The school gym was packed last Thursday evening for the annual commencement exercises at which Dr. Paul Grosshuesch, president of Mission House College at Plymouth, Wisconsin, gave an inspiring address that was really enjoyed by the large crowd.

Honor awards were presented to the two valedictorians, Ray Jorgenson, Jr. and Novella Beler, and to Paul Schuldt, salutatorian of the class. Novella and Ray were presented with medals for having the highest grades for the four years, while Paul received a medal for work in literature. Novella and Ray also received scholarships in three colleges: Waldorf at Forest City, Luther at Decorah and Upper Iowa at Fayette.

H. F. Jost, president of the school board, presented each of the fifteen seniors with a diploma.

Poem Wins Award

The poem printed below was written by Paul Schuldt, rather hurriedly one evening as it was needed for Literature class the next day, but hastily constructed as it was it shows a marked talent and won for him the Josten Art and Literature award which was presented to him last Thursday evening at the commencement exercises.

TO A TREE

To me there is something that's strangely pathetic,
And that is the fall of a beautiful tree.
It weathered the years and it sheltered its loved ones—
The birds and the squirrels and the people like me.

The children, the grownups, have treasured its presence
As it steadfastly stood while the decades unrolled;
And on its broad trunk were some ingrown initials,
Fond secrets of some happy romance they hold.

But its end is in sight, and some well-meaning fellow,
Is going to earn a few coins if he can.

With a crack then a crash, it is vainly defiant
As it smashes to earth by the might of a man.

—Paul Herman Schuldt.

Uncle Sam's Air Mail Service Marks Its 20th Anniversary

Spirit of Pioneering Flavored Early Development of America's Fastest Postal Transportation; New York-Washington Route Was First

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

The scene was Mineola, N. Y. The date, sometime between September 23 and 30, 1911. An excited postmaster lifted his eyes to the heavens and saw mail pouches plummet toward him from the cockpit of an early model army airplane.

That was the start of air mail, a national institution which currently observes its twentieth birthday anniversary. Officially, air mail dates back to May 15, 1918, when the first scheduled flight was made between New York and Washington under post-office department supervision. But in 1911 the intrepid Earle Ovington made history by carrying about 37,000 pieces of mail from Nassau boulevard airport, Long Island, to Mineola, where he dropped the pouches and flew back home.

In 1911—and even in 1918—it was considered an impractical stunt. Today, in 1938, giant silver airliners glide to every corner of the nation day and night, carrying the written word of man to distant destinations in incredibly fast time. Last year 760,000,000 letters were flown by a service which has become an all-important factor in American business and industry.

Such an institution would bring joy to the heart of a man named John Wise. Mr. Wise rose from his seat in congress back in 1843 to propose legislation regarding the carriage of mail by aircraft. But Mr. Wise might also have aged prematurely had he realized the setbacks confronting aviation and air mail before it reached its 1938 stage of development.

For air mail has not been a smooth and successful venture. It has weathered storms far more severe than those of a wintry Rocky mountain night at 10,000 feet. It has seen the flush of premature success, as in 1926 when a pound of mail brought the carrier $3.00 for 1,000 miles transportation. And it has seen the depths of February, 1933, when the postoffice department cancelled all contracts because a few major companies had swallowed the little fellows.

War Speeded Air Mail.

The World war sped adoption of air mail because aircraft had been used so successfully in France. In the beginning the postoffice department had complete supervision over the work and army fliers in army planes handled the transportation. But late in 1918 the post-office department dropped its army affiliation and bought its own planes.

As in 1938, the economic rule governing air mail expansion in 1918 is that such service becomes a necessary utility when it operates between points farther apart than a night's journey by train. With that in mind the postoffice department began planning a transcontinental route from Atlantic to Pacific. This job was flavored with the pioneering spirit of America's first transcontinental railroad or her coast-to-coast telephone and telegraph systems. It was a challenge to the ingenuity of clear-visioned modern pioneers.

The route was composed of four distinct sections. The first, flown May 15, 1919, was between Cleveland and Chicago. The second was established July 1, 1919, between Cleveland and New York. On the anniversary of the first section, May 15, 1920, the third division was opened between Chicago and Omaha. And the following September 8 the fourth section between Omaha and San Francisco was inaugurated.

It sounds simple and matter-of-fact, but many a grim faced pioneer pilot acquired the lines of age during that short span of years. Such famous pioneers as Jack Knight and E. Hamilton Lee became identified with the game—Knight fly-weather. Even the next pilot had left the airport.

Knight, realizing the flight's importance, volunteered to take off for Chicago, a route he had never before flown, and under difficult weather conditions. He took off for Des Moines, passed over that city without incident and headed for Iowa City where he was due to take gas. Storms and low visibility hampered him until he reached Iowa City, where he circled 20 minutes, seeking the airport. The field crew there had been told the flight was cancelled at Omaha and had left for home. Only a blessed watchman was on duty and he finally heard Knight's motor, igniting a flare to help the beleaguered pilot land. His gas supply replenished, he headed for Chicago to complete the most dramatic flight in air mail's history.

The system began rapid expansion. To supply the transcontinental line with proper loads, feeder routes were established between Chicago and St. Louis and Chicago and the Twin Cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul. In 1925 the Kelly air mail bill was passed authorizing the postmaster general to turn the work over to private operators. By the end of 1926, 14 domestic routes were being operated by private companies. The postoffice department relinquished all control except the power to grant contracts, which it guarded jealously.

Private operators prospered in 1926 when the rate of pay for air mail was changed to a poundage basis on a fixed rate not exceeding ing between Cleveland and Chicago in DH-4s and Lee herding Jenny biplanes over the Washington-New York route.

Night Flying Experiments.

But this was daylight flying, necessitating the sending of mail by train at night and materially lessening the usefulness of air transport-tation. For several years the post-office department conducted experiments in night flying with radio, radio beams and airway lights. On July 1, 1924, the first scheduled night flight was successfully completed, but as early as 1921 a day-night flight was made across the continent to demonstrate its practicability to congress.

Jack Knight, one of air mail's pioneer pilots, as he appeared in the aviator's costume of 15 years ago, shortly after his epochal night flight from Omaha to Chicago. Knight, now retired from active flying, is with United Airlines in Chicago.

Behind this venture was Otto Praeger, former assistant postmaster general who pioneered the expansion of aviation. Praeger felt a day-night flight would win congress over to the value of a progressive view on air mail. At 4:30 a. m., February 22, 1921, an eastbound plane left San Francisco loaded with mail that landed in New York city at 4:50 p. m. the following day.

Trouble Over Iowa City.

It was on the central portion of this flight that Jack Knight ran into such trouble as had seldom plagued an air mail pilot, but he came through with flying colors to give day-night flying a good name.

Knight's portion of the flight was from North Platte to Omaha. The ship reached Omaha at midnight and Knight was told the hop to Chicago was canceled because of bad $3.00 a pound for the first 1,000 miles. Immediately began an aggressive advertising campaign to popularize the system.

Profits Excessive.

Changes were soon made to provide for the granting of air mail "certificates" which permitted carriers to apply for contracts. By 1930 profits became excessive, according to the government, and charges were changed from a pound basis to the space-mile basis. Carriers were further ordered to fill all available space with passengers, amounting to government subsidy of passenger traffic.

In 1933 came the dark hour for commercial aviation, when four major companies emerged through a merger of operators. It had been expected that the act of 1930 would produce keen bidding for contracts but the mergers resulted and the major operators in turn entered into gentlemen's agreements about which routes each should seek.

That state of affairs led to cancellation of all air mail contracts by the post office department in February, 1933. The army air corps was ordered to fly the mail. But army pilots were ill trained for cross-country and instrument flying. Twelve deaths and great loss of property resulted during the tragic experiment.

Aviation's story since the 1933 affair is a complex one, filled with legislative investigation and new congressional acts. It will suffice that public denunciation of the government's unsuccessful operation resulted in a return of contracts to private operators under conditions more satisfactory from a mutual standpoint.

Rates Have Dropped.

Today the United States probably has an air mail service superior to that of any other nation in speed, dependability and economy. Its history is one of constantly decreasing costs. Oldtimers who dispatched mail in that first historic pouch from New York to Washington may remember they paid 24 cents an ounce, compared to the present rate of 6 cents.

Such is the brief story of Uncle Sam's latest venture in speeding the mails. Who can say that the pony express, colorful symbol of an earlier era, held more adventure than the night flights of pioneer birdmen who flew above the same trails several decades later?

Plenty of Potash Is Now Assured Farmers of the United States

Dallas, Texas.—America is now free of dependence on foreign nations for its supply of potash, valuable chemical widely used by the nation's farmers as an ingredient in fertilizers.

How a dry lake bed in a California desert, and a mine in New Mexico where men work beneath an overlying blanket of water, have made America's potash industry possible, was described here at a special symposium of the American Chemical society.

Prior to the World war Germany with its great potash deposits at Stassfurt, monopolized the world's potash trade. These Stassfurt deposits, formed in prehistoric times by evaporation of sea water which then covered the spot, have an origin comparable with the dry, desert-bounded Searles lake at Torna, Calif.

By drilling wells into the dry lake a strong brine is encountered which contains over 35 per cent dissolved chemicals, said W. A. Gale, chemist of the American Potash and Chemical corporation at Trona.

Triumph of Chemistry.

The brine is rich in the salts of potassium and sodium and the separation of the various fractions by evaporation is one of the triumphs of American chemistry. The prior work in Germany was of little use in developing the present processes. The founding of a town of 1,800 workers in a desert region was no small feat in itself.

The Searles lake deposits at Trona furnished 40 per cent of America's potash needs last year, said R. W. Mumford of the same company. As auxiliary products the salt brine produces 40 per cent of the world's consumption of borax and boric acid, together with substantial amounts of soda ash and salt cake.

In the California brine wells the potassium chloride is obtained only after ingenious evaporation processes. In the New Mexico deposits, near Carlsbad, the potassium chloride is mined in operations which, in some ways, are a race against time. The urgency arises because the potassium deposits lie beneath layers of water-bearing sand and gravel. If that water enters the potash mine, the operations will be abandoned because the potassium chloride is highly soluble in water.

Three "Lost Worlds" Yield Fine Lot of Specimens

New York.—Five American Museum of Natural History explorers have brought back a large collection of specimens showing the close relationship of birds and mammals atop three "lost worlds" in the jungles of Venezuela.

Headed by Dr. George H. Tate and backed by William Phelps, the expedition explored 8,000-foot high Mt. Auyantepuy in the Orinoco jungle, one of the least explored regions in the world. With them on their return they brought 2,300 birds and 500 mammals, plus a large collection of plants.

Museum expeditions, of which Doctor Tate was a member, already had visited the other two isolated previously unexplored mountains, Mt. Roraima and Mt. Duida.

They spent three and a half months atop the tableland. Unlike many expeditions which in the past have had to spend weeks and months toiling to reach their objectives, they reached Mt. Auyantepuy in a few hours by airplane from Ciudad Bolivar, a city in Venezuela.

Peculiar types of vegetation found nowhere else in the world were found growing on the bare sandstone or on the humus. Varieties of orchids were also observed.

Cancer Does Occur in Those of Tender Years

St. Louis.—Young persons can and do have cancer. It occurs in practically all parts of the body.

The Barnard Free Skin and Cancer hospital here since 1908 has had 134 young patients in whom the diagnosis of cancer was definitely proved by microscopic examination.

"The age of the patient must not influence one in procrastination and 'watchful waiting,'" the St. Louis specialists state. "The results of treatment in young persons, as in older ones, depend on early diagnosis and adequate treatment."

Japan's Volcanoes

Armageddon's History Probed by Digging Through 20 Layers

Chicago.—Digging through 20 layers of city ruins, an Oriental institute expedition in Palestine has probed the entire history of Armageddon, classic battlefield of the world. Word that the expedition had struck bedrock at this site which the Book of Revelations names as the location for a final battle between forces of good and evil, was received here by Director John A. Wilson of the institute.

The date for the twentieth and oldest city will not be estimated until pottery associated with it has been more closely studied, reported Gordon Loud, in charge of excavations at the site.

The 13-acre mound identified as Armageddon of Bible fame is now called Megiddo. The Oriental institute began exploring its contents in 1925 and has found in it ruins of civilizations dating from 400 B. C. back to earlier than 2000 B. C.

Excavations have revealed that, although battles were fought at Armageddon furiously and often, the city flourished in the intervals of peace. This long-forgotten side of Armageddon's personality has been rediscovered in the palace of the ruling princes.

Its Palace Was Splendid.

Commanding a magnificent view of the plain, this palace in the Fifteenth to Thirteenth centuries before Christ was luxurious and splendid. The ruins show that its many rooms were grouped around a central court, paved with lime, and painted in brilliant colors. Visitors to the ivory palace paused to wash in an anteroom paved with seashells. The hoard of gold, ivory, and lapis lazuli treasures found in the palace testifies to magnificence of Canaanite princes in the era when they were vassals to Egypt.

Solomon's interest in Megiddo has been recalled by discovery in the ruins of great stables which would shelter more than 300 horses at a time, reminding excavators that King Solomon in his own day was probably more widely known for horses than for wives.

The lowest levels boast architecture surprisingly good for the period around 2000 B. C., Mr. Loud reports, but these early settlements have been relatively poor in buried objects.

In the nineteenth level has been uncovered a large, round altar which dates from about the time of the patriarchs of the Bible—Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

The earliest battle at Armageddon, so far known, was fought in May, 1479 B. C., when Thutmose the Third of Egypt defeated the Asiatic allies. This feat was duplicated in September, 1918 A. D., when General Allenby led a British division against Turks near the site.

"Fingerprints" of Roads Show Slippery Surfaces

London.—A "fingerprint" method reminiscent of Scotland Yard technique has been devised by ministry of transport officials here to track down slippery road surfaces.

A section of the road is inked over and a smooth tire rolled along it. The tire is then transferred to a sheet of white paper, where an exact record of the surface texture is imprinted.

A perfectly smooth road becomes dangerously slippery when wet because the water, instead of being squeezed into interstices present when the pavement is of comparatively rough texture, forms a liquid film between tire and road.

In the "fingerprint" tests, a slippery road is detected when the inky tire makes a full impression on the paper over the entire area of contact, whereas a comparatively "non-skid" surface, having numerous individual points of contact separated by channels through which water can escape, shows a speckled print.

That Tired Feeling Is Due to Lack of Vitamin C

Los Angeles.—For that tired feeling—try orange juice. No, it's not an advertisement, and for orange juice you can substitute any other fresh fruit or vegetable that contains plenty of anti-scurvy vitamin C. The list of such foods runs from apples and cabbages to tomatoes.

Tiredness, along with rheumatism, anemia and other common afflictions, may result from lack of vitamin C, it appears from an announcement made by Dr. Lawrence E. Detrick, research associate in chemistry on the Los Angeles campus of the University of California.

"Thermos Bottle" Burials Found in Arizona Ruins

Tucson, Ariz. — Indians in the Southwest over a thousand years ago didn't have thermos bottles, but they invented a burial fashion that looks curiously like one.

Discovery of this heretofore unknown type of Indian burial, consisting of a bottle within a tube, is reported by Carl F. Miller, archeologist of this city.

★ Farrell-Gaynor Re-Make

★ Blondell Sisters

★ Hollywood Boomerang

—By Virginia Vale

AT LAST Charles Farrell has an opportunity to stage a come-back in American motion pictures that his admirers of days when he was making tures with Janet Gaynor wanted for him. He will appear in a re-make of one of Farrell-Gaynor hits, "Side Up." Remember it?

It was the picture for which Farrell and Gaynor had to learn to the dismay of practically everybody else on the Fox lot. For worked at it endlessly, it seem the others, with a voice coach, the results were distracting, to the least. But the result was it.

But this new version of the picture is going to be something different judging by the cast. It will Shirley Temple—and will include Bert Lahr and Bill Robinson.

Every so often come rumors Maude Adams will appear on screen. Now it's David Selznick is said to have captured her, to the dowager in "The Young Heart," with Janet Gaynor, Paul Goddard, Douglas Fairbanks, and Roland Young in the cast. Her retirement from the stage in 1918 she has refused to do movie offers, but this time she at least was willing to talk things over.

Remember that little native "Elephant Boy"? You'll see him in "Gungha Din," with Victor McLaglen, Cary Grant, and Jack O'Connell. The fact that he's to be included would look as if, when the picture is screened, the picture will show influence of "Kim," which has about to be screened for years.

If you want to see a movie in the making, go to "Accidents Happen" and see Gloria Blum, sister of Joan. She's on her way to the screen. She has been for quite a while as that's concerned, but just leading her to the movies, cause she didn't want to cast on her sister's success.

If you encounter a man who is tremendously interested in the music of your part of the country, he'll probably turn out to be one of the Radio Rubees. Each Friday of the three leave New York, in different directions, in a search for old American melodies; they ready have a collection of two to three hundred records. Recently Harry Duncan voted himself to New England while that same week Zeb Turner flew to the Mid-West and Bill Smith went south.

Now that Marlene Dietrich signed to make a picture for Twentieth Century-Fox, with Ronald Colman, and to make three for Columbia, you can't blame the Paramount officials who let her go if they are doing a bit of worrying.

For Frank Capra may direct one of the Columbia releases, and he has a way of turning out smash hits. Marlene Dietrich. And it's no fun to lose money on a star, let her go, then have her bring gold into box office for somebody else!

ODDS AND ENDS—William Fox, whom you've seen as the kid brother in the "Hopalong Cassidy" series, has been to the air, in "Pepper Young's Farewell to Arms." Joan Crawford, after twelve years with Metro, has signed for another year to do one stage play a year if she can. They're shooting again on "Antoinette" . . . Johnny Weissmuller play Tarzan again for Metro soon. Seven stand-ins, who have been in movies for years, got their chance as they were cast as themselves in "The Angel" . . . Frances Dee drew a nice assignment when she was chosen to play opposite Ronald Colman in "If I Were King." © Western Newspaper Union.

TODAY'S STORY

Lord Macbeth Found Similar To Gangster

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

IF YOU were to take the man Macbeth out of William Shakespeare's play, he would make a modern gangster. He strongly resembles Al Capone and John Dillinger.

Macbeth was unfit for organized society, he did not adapt himself to the scheme of things, but rather he tried to fit the world around himself. Selfishness ruled his thinking, he wanted that which belonged to others. His ego desired to be the head of the outfit. After he had gained his position of power, his life continued to parallel that of a gangster. He suspected all men of being murderous. To protect his life he employed the most extensive system of spies. Yet his days were lived in constant fear. As do many criminals, he thought he could beat the laws of right and wrong, but a fearful life and violent death showed him that he was subject to the same world as other men.

Most everyone recalls the plot of "Macbeth" either from the book studied in school or from some stage production. A sketch will re-establish it.

Wife Leads Plotters.

Macbeth, a general in the king's army, won a great victory, as the play opens. The king honored his favorite subject by planning to spend that night at his castle. Immediately Macbeth and his wife reveal that this is the opportunity for which they have been planning. They will murder the king in their own castle, and no one will dare to suspect Macbeth, the hero.

When her husband faltered in his scheme, Lady Macbeth forced him to the deed by calling him cowardly, for she knew how much he wished to be king. She prepared all the details of the deed, even drugging the bodyguards. She said that she would have stabbed the king herself, but he resembled her father as he slept.

HE DIED RICH

The life span of William Shakespeare, from 1564 to 1616, was almost identical with that of Queen Elizabeth, great ruler of the English Renaissance.

Of his life not enough is known to satisfy the world's interest. There are legendary tales, besides written evidences left by his friends. To his boyhood belongs the incident of his poaching, to his youth the relationship with Ann Hathaway, and to his manhood, his rise from lackey at the play houses to owner and producer of plays. He accumulated over quarter of a million dollars. Of his contemporaries, some envied him, some loved him.

Macbeth killed the sleeping king, and was the loudest in his surprise and sorrow when the deed was discovered the next morning.

Banquo, close friend and fellow officer, dared to show Macbeth that he suspected the truth. Macbeth later had him taken for a ride and murdered because he knew too much.

Life as king did not bring joy to Macbeth. Fear mounted in his own heart, and he increased the number of spies in the homes of his nobles. Murder followed murder. As soon as he felt that any man disliked him, he notified his killers. Hatred of Macbeth grew on all sides of Scotland. Finally the time seemed ripe, and Macduff went to England for help. From personal spite, Macbeth had the helpless wife and children of Macduff murdered.

Lady Macbeth Dies.

Life for Lady Macbeth was one long punishment. She had to watch her husband's degeneration, knowing all the while that she might have prevented it. Finally, her subconscious mind got the upper hand. Sleep was not restful, but was dominated by thoughts of the murder of King Duncan, whose blood she kept seeing on her hands. She became totally insane.

In the last act of the play she died, and when Macbeth heard the news he said, "She should have died hereafter. There would have been a time for such a word." She would have died anyway! (But it might have been at a more convenient time!)

Justice and revenge work together, when in hand-to-hand fight, Macduff kills Macbeth.

If Shakespeare lived today, he would be skillful with the horror movie. In "Macbeth" there are witches who prophesy direful happenings. A storm is background for murder. In a cave filled with bats, a fire smolders beneath a cauldron.

The elements of tragedy are many. Macbeth violated every duty: to his king, to his subjects, to his wife, to God. As hatred and murder increased in his soul, love and sympathy decreased, until his wife became to him as a stranger, who should have died when it would not have disturbed his activity.

Lesson for May 29

MAINTAINING PERSONAL EFFICIENCY

LESSON TEXT—Dan. 1:8-16, 19, 20; I Cor. 9:24-27.
GOLDEN TEXT—Every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. I Cor. 9:25.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How Daniel Pleased God.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Ten Times Strong.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—In Training for the Game of Life.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Liquor's Effect Upon Working Efficiency.

Personal efficiency is a subject which is receiving much attention in our day. There has never been so much accurate and usable information as we now have regarding diet, exercise, and medical care. The mind as well as the body has come in for attention and scores of books are available on the development and full use of the powers of personality. Some of these are trash, but others are helpful. Business is co-operating with the school and the home in giving boys and girls the opportunity to grow up to be useful and happy members of society. The church adds its important contribution, although we must confess that it is far from what it might be by the grace and power of God.

I. A Sound Mind in a Sound Body (Dan. 1:8-16, 19, 20).

Daniel and his three Hebrew companions had been brought to Babylon as captives, and were there chosen to enter the royal school for future service at the court. Every provision was made for the students chosen for that school. Their diet, however, included not only meat which was unclean to the Jew but wine, which Daniel knew to be undesirable. It took holy boldness to ask to be excused from that which the king had prescribed, but Daniel was blessed not only with courage, but with tact and courtesy. A ten-day test of a simple diet and water proved so successful that the plan was continued. At the end of the three-year course the Hebrews were not only physically stronger but mentally and spiritually superior.

The experience of Daniel and his brethren is not just an incident eagerly grasped at by "blue-nosed reformers" to prevent their neighbors from "enjoying" intoxicating liquor. The testimony of science, of business, of experience in all ages, proves that the use of even an amount of alcohol so small that the user does not feel its presence materially "reduces endurance, accuracy, and rapidity of muscular action of all kinds" (Emerson). It so cuts down the ability to think clearly and to react promptly to danger that it is absolutely taboo with such responsible workers as railroad engineers. It is not a stimulant, but a narcotic, which dulls the nerve centers. Dr. Edward Rosenow says, "The use of alcohol as a beverage is never justified. There is no such thing as the right use of beverage alcohol."

Such information as the above is available in publications of temperance organizations, books by various writers, and even in publications by state liquor commissions. It is published in newspapers and magazines and circulated by safety organizations and insurance companies. Yet, unbelievable as it may seem, the use of liquor is on the increase.

II. Success in Life Calls for Self-Control (I Cor. 9:24-27).

Paul delighted in illustrations taken from the athletic field. He talked of running a race, of fighting a good fight. He knew the athlete's need of keeping his body under.

The one who serves his school or athletic association in physical competition gladly surrenders his personal liberty to the guidance of the coach. He eats carefully, sleeps full nights, exercises consistently, and above all does not use alcohol in any form. Listen to the words of great athletic coaches—Yost: "I would not waste my time trying to train or develop one who uses alcohol." Stagg: "Coaches and trainers are dead against the use of alcoholic liquors, even beer."

Paul rightly points out that all these sacrifices are made by men for what is but a transient earthly crown. How much more should we do for the sake of our souls. Temperance instruction may well stress the physical and mental degradation that follows the use of alcohol, but above all let us teach boys and girls that its use has sent countless souls to eternal punishment and separation from God. We should be deeply moved by the loss of personal efficiency, but what shall we say about the loss of a soul?

Faculty of Reason

Reason is a faculty of the mind by which it distinguishes truth from falsehood, and good from evil, and which enables the possessor to deduce inferences from facts, or from propositions.—Locke.

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to be maintained. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

NEWS OF THE CLASSES

The typing class held a tournament which consisted of a series of ten-minute speed tests. Four people in each of the two typing classes drew a name to determine who they would compete against. Those who won over the person they were competing with the first day of the tournament went on trying to win the honor of the "champion of the winners." While those who lost the first day went on trying to be the "champion of the losers." After the champion in each class was determined they competed against each other. Doris Johnson was named the "champion of the winners," and Evelyn Arnold was named the "champion of the losers."

The junior class enjoyed a lovely return party which was given by the seniors. The party consisted of a weiner roast and roller skating. An enjoyable time was had by all.

see, first, what the case was in "the Kansas City Stockyards case." The Department of Agriculture, under a 15-year-old law, the secretary of the department is empowered to fix the rates of fees, commissions and other charges made by shippers of livestock into the yards. That is, the secretary may fix those rates "after the facts have been determined," and due to the fact that the secretary has been given to all duties of the parties con-years ago, complaint was made to the department that the Kansas City stockyards were charging unreasonably high fees. The department had no choice other than to hold a hearing, decide the facts and issue an order. That required that course. But, the records in the case, which were held was a record of a farce. All of the arguments were heard, and the department's own investigators submitted their reports. It appears, that the stockyards companies never allowed to present their side of the case—did not get a day in court. Well, the secretary of agriculture, Mr. Wallace, issued an order fixing new rates for the stockyards company to the federal courts and the stockyards finally wound up in the court of the United States. The court has now rendered its decision, and that is the reason for the discussion. The highest court in the land, the Supreme court, has rendered its decision in overturning the rates. It did so, if not because of the arbitrary way in which he fixed the rates, but because the rates may or may not be fair; the court very definitely said that the respondent or defendant had the right to have his side of the case presented and Mr. Wallace had the opportunity for a fair trial. It may or may not be news to the stockyards to know that the government of 50 agencies of the federal government that have the right to act as "legislative bodies and from the fact that the agencies are empowered to render decisions that powerful as a court decision, that these agencies can not be overruled unless those agencies are willing to accept the decision. That is to say, the agencies or those charged may be brought to a review of the court for the order issued. In the Kansas City Stockyards case, the stockyards had to go to the court. A precedent and guideline for future cases by this flock of legislative decisions, therefore, has at last been sequent order go further than in the prior one. As precedent is built upon precedent, it happens frequently that after a period of years such an agency is exercising authority never intended by congress. The authority has grown up frequently because none of the respondents have money to contest the case further. It costs money to prove innocence when you are accused by your government. Again, as to the importance of the decision from the standpoint of its scope: there has been an immediate and vigorous reaction by the national labor relations board. That crew started running immediately after the court's opinion was read. They tucked their tails between their legs and went quickly into a retreat from the bold and brazen position they had held against all who sought to challenge their authority. To see the swagger and braggadocio transformed so suddenly into a meek and lowly attitude—well, any one with a sense of humor could hardly keep from laughing. There never has been a federal agency in my 20 years in Washington that has relegated to itself the arrogant authority, the dictatorial authority, shown by the labor relations board. If the national labor relations act were sound in every respect, the personnel that is administering it would destroy whatever chance it had of succeeding.

Only One Side Heard

So, when the court ruling told the legislative courts to be fair with those accused or charged, the labor relations board smelled a number of legal proceedings against it. Its members recognized that there were cases it had "decided" that would not stand the test in the spotlight of a federal court for the reason that the respondents had not been allowed to tell their side of the story. There were cases, for example, where the board had heard its own investigators' testimony, the testimony of several C. I. O. organizers whose job had been to stir up trouble—and where the respondents had been informed that the board had "no interest" in what they had to say. There were other cases where board investigators had gone into factories and had used methods taught the world by Dictator Stalin's OGPU. Naturally, the board tried to get out from under.

The board's lawyers, recognizing the dangerous ground upon which their cases in federal court were standing, sought to withdraw their request for court enforcement. But Mr. Henry Ford, one of those whom the board and the C. I. O.-Lewis labor group sought to punish, felt that the case should be tried in court, and he is insisting through his lawyers that the proceedings continue. The Ford lawyers happen to be the lawyers who fought the late and unlamented NRA in the famous Schechter case, and won it—which ended NRA. They are going after the labor relations board and when they get through, it is possible we will know how much power that board has.

Along with the Ford case, the board has other troubles. The great Inland Steel company of Chicago, and the Douglass Aircraft corporation have decided they did not get a square deal from the New Deal board. They have asked federal courts to review their cases and decide whether the orders issued by the board were in accordance with the facts, and they have asked also for a ruling as to whether they had been denied legal rights.

This Board on the Spot

It is made to appear, therefore, that the board may have to undo a lot of things it has done. It may have to admit, also, that in some cases there has actually been maliciousness on the part of some of its investigators. Consider the Ford case, for example. If the board withdraws its original order, it will be saying in effect that the facts upon which it based that order were not the facts at all. That will be somewhat embarrassing, it seems to me. It will be more embarrassing, however, if it comes forth with a new order which is based upon a different set of facts. Either the first set of facts or the second of facts obviously is wrong—not facts at all in one of the two instances.

There are other instances of other boards and commissions which have been exercising all too much authority for the good of the country, according to the way I see things. Few of them have been so blatant about it, however, as the Department of Agriculture and the labor relations board. Some of the agencies, notably the interstate commerce commission, has never been accused of unfairness, as far as I know. It may have made mistakes, or legal questions may have been tested in court, but that agency holds the respect of railway executives, shippers and labor alike.

True Courtesy Is Consideration in Action

Between merely formal courtesy and heart-inspired kindness, there is as much difference as between a wax model and a real woman.

Even formal civility, however, is invariably preferable to "brutal frankness."

The harder it is for a person to be decent in society, the more he should practice the social "niceties." The best place to practice kindness is in one's home. If one trains himself to be polite to his relatives, he need not fear that he will make any serious social blunders.—James Warnack in Los Angeles Times.

For Street and Home Wear

TWO dresses, as practical as they are pretty—one for shopping and general street wear, the other ideal for round the house, and made on slenderizing lines. Notice that they both use the smart front closing. Both these patterns are quick and easy to make up, and each is accompanied by a complete and detailed sew chart.

Frock With Girdled Waistline.

Fashion says everything must have a certain amount of soft detailing this season, and this charming tailored dress obeys with draping at the neckline, the girdled waist, and bust fullness beneath smooth shoulders. Easy sleeves, cut in one with the shoulders, make it a cool style for summer. Silk crepe, silk print (in that case, have a plain-colored girdle effect) sharkskin, linen and shantung are good fabric choices for this.

House Dress for Large Women.

It's a diagram dress, so that it may be made in just a few hours. The long, unbroken, unbelted line, the utter simplicity, the v-neck, make this dress extremely becoming to women in the 36 to 52 size range. Short, pleated sleeves give plenty of ease for reaching and stretching. Make this up in pretty cottons that will stand plenty of wear and washing—percale, gingham, seersucker, broadcloth.

The Patterns.

1489 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 4 1/2 yards of 39-inch material, plus 1/2 yard of contrasting for girdle. 1476 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 5 yards of 35-inch material.

Costly Tears

Tears cost a lot of money in Hollywood. In the first place, it takes quite a time to induce a satisfactory flow, and time is worth dollars in the film studios.

In the second place, complete "re-make-up" of an actress is necessary after every "cry." And, thirdly, the emotional strain, actresses claim, leaves them with such a "hang over" that they are unable to work the following day. The film is held up—but wages are paid just the same.

Funeral Services Held Saturday For Young Klemme Farmer

BURNETTE HAEFNER DIED SUDDENLY AT MASON CITY

Lived In This Community All His Life

Funeral services were conducted at the Liberty Methodist Church Saturday afternoon by Rev. John Burnette, assisted by Dr. Wm. Z. Zalka, for Burnette Haefner, young Klemme farmer.

The young man died at a Mason City hospital after but a brief illness.

Obituary

Burnette Ernest Haefner was born December 20, 1910 on a farm in Liberty township, the third of a family of four sons born to his parents, Wesley Haefner and wife, Alice Schult.

He spent all of his life in this community. We know his brothers, his parents, his grandparents and his great grandmother, all clean, industrious people, and most of them long lived.

He grew up in a Christian home, attended our schools, and became a member of the Liberty Methodist Church.

On November 14, 1931, Burnette Haefner and Swanetta Walters were married and just three weeks ago a son, Dennis LaVerne, came to gladden their home.

Burnette started his career, like most young men of our day, as a poor man. He worked three years as a carpenter, and now, for the last two years, has been farming on the Priebe farm near Klemme.

He was a strong, healthy man and had a pleasant disposition; a clean man as to habits and was well liked in this community.

But it seems, he was not destined to become an old man. An abscess in his abdominal cavity brought his earthly career to a close, quite suddenly, on the evening of May 25th.

He reached the age of 27 years, 5 months and 5 days.

He leaves of his immediate family besides his wife and infant son: his parents, Mr and Mrs. Wesley Haefner; his brothers, Wilbur of Liberty township; Rufus of De Kalb, Illinois; and Paul, at home. One grandmother, Mrs. Ernest Schult, Klemme; one great grandmother, Mrs. Gottlieb Haefner, and other relatives and friends.

TWO ELEVATORS AT GOODELL ARE SOLD

GOODELL—Sale of the two Goodell elevators to W. H. Hubbard of Allendorf was announced here Wednesday by James and Paul Veldhouse, elevator operators here for the past four years.

Mr. Hubbard expects to occupy the south rather than the north elevator and will remodel the building, enlarge and improve the office and install a new set of scales. He expects to buy a residence here and will bring his wife here in the near future. They have one grown son.

The Veldhouse brothers came to Goodell from Kanawha and while operating the business here Paul Veldhouse was married to a Goodell woman, formerly Miss Florence Mason.

Broad hints are wasted on narrow-minded people.

All things of real value are bought with self-sacrifice.

U. S. SPORTSMEN SAVING CANADIAN WILDLIFE MARSHES

Repairs to the continent's great "duck factory" are underway in Canada this spring in a new movement supported by thousands of the country's duck hunters to boost wildfowl crops by assisting nature, according to the More Game Birds Foundation.

Organized as Ducks Unlimited, Inc., a nation-wide non-profit organization of wildfowlers, the movement aims at restoration and protection of vast duck-breeding marshes in the prairie provinces, source of the bulk of America's wild ducks but largely ruined in recent years by drought and agriculture.

Co-operating in the program are the Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta governments and conservation organizations. Dominion officials have offered for use as waterfowl breeding sanctuaries hundreds of water conservation projects in process of establishment throughout the Canadian drought belt.

First construction work under the Ducks Unlimited program was started early in May at Big Grass Marsh, Manitoba. Formerly over 50,000 acres in extent and productive of hundreds of thousands of waterfowl, the marsh was unsuccessfully drained for agriculture. Land ownership now has largely reverted to the province through non-payment of taxes.

Ducks Unlimited's field staff of engineers and technicians is supervising erection of a simple dam across the abandoned main drainage ditch to restore the marsh. Use of the land is being provided free by the province and local authorities are co-operating in furnishing labor.

Work also is underway on a similar project at Waterhen Lake, Saskatchewan, aimed at reflooding 11,000 acres of the finest waterfowl nesting ground in the province, according to Thomas C. Main, former Canadian National railways conservation engineer directing the program.

Hordes of predatory crows, found to consume a large percentage of duck eggs, are being controlled under co-operative campaigns sponsored by Ducks Unlimited and the provincial Departments of Natural Resources in Saskatchewan alone, both agencies have appropriated a total of $5,800 for cash awards for crow shooting. Regulation of grazing and marsh burning, and organization of volunteer rescue crews to salvage helpless ducklings during droughts, is being sponsored.

"This practical program may well solve the duck depression and deserves the support of all wildfowlers. Without protected places in which to breed no wildlife can survive," John C. Huntington, Vice President of Ducks Unlimited, declares.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to take this means of extending our thanks to all who comforted and assisted us during our recent sorrow. Also, we wish to thank those who contributed flowers and those who took part in the services.

A number of special musical numbers were heard on the program, and the school band, under the direction of Martin K. Elstad, made their first public appearance of the season.

The Color Bearers, Veteran Lew Lewis, the Legion Auxiliary, Girl Scouts and school children all took part in the parade.

Primary Election Monday Will Be First Round In Political Battle

NOT MUCH EXCITEMENT REGISTERED IN POLITICS AT THE PRESENT TIME

Monday, June 6th is Primary Election day in Iowa when voters will go to the polls, state their political preference and draw either a republican or a democratic ballot and thereon vote their favorite candidate.

Democrats In Battle

Most of the pre-primary excitement seems to be in the democrat camp with plenty of mud-slinging going on between Otha D. Wearin of Hastings who wants Guy Gillette's job as United States senator. So intense is their battle that other democratic candidates for the office are entirely out of the spot light.

Republicans Take It Easy

On the other hand L. J. Dickinson of Algona and Lloyd Thurston of Osceola, both candidates for U. S. Senator are conducting a comparatively clean campaign. The republican voters here will no doubt string along with Dickinson.

Quiet In County

County office candidates have no opposition on the primary ballot, so things are quiet here. The big battle all the way through will take place this fall . . . from county on up through the state offices.

But, Monday is election day, so go to the polls and show your colors and vote your ballot.

TWIN LAKE TOWNSHIP FARM WOMAN DIES

Services Were Held Tuesday Afternoon At Goodell For Mrs. Martha Brass

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at the Goodell U. B. Church for Mrs. Martha Brass who passed away at her home Saturday morning, May 28. Services were in charge of Arthur Wellemeyer with Rev. Wm. Dye officiating. Pall bearers were Wm Kruse, Geo. Ruka, Peter Peterson, Wm. Schlichting, Ole Sandberg and Wm. Beier.

Obituary

Mrs. Martha Brass, age 65, died at her home in Twin Lake township early Saturday morning, May 28, 1938, from apoplexy. She had been in poor health for several years, but she was up and around attending to her home which she kept for her son, Heiko, who is single.

Her maiden name was Martha Rust. She was born in Hardin county, Iowa, the fourth of a family of ten children. Her parents Heiko and Antje Rust were natives of Germany.

She became a member of the Lutheran Church by confirmation, attended the rural schools and at the age of twenty years became the wife of Herman Brass. However, her married life came to an end seven years later when her husband was killed by a horse and died. This was while the family lived on the Quigley farm.

She then moved with her four small children, to Hickory Grove, where she continued to farm and care for her home.

Ten years later she moved to their present home in Twin Lake township.

As her family of children became grown Ehme R. Brass, her eldest son, died of the Flu during the epidemic of 1919; a daughter, Anna, was married to Lloyd Van Buskirk and lives nearby in Twin Lake township; a daughter, Mattie, became a nurse and is working in the health department at Sioux City, Iowa, while Heiko continued to farm and she kept the house for him.

We admire the strength and the courage of Mrs. Martha Brass, that she could endure the work and the hardships necessary to bring to manhood and womanhood her family of four children, without her husband, and on the farm. She asked no help and always paid her honest debts.

She leaves besides her three children; nine grandchildren; Three brothers, Harm Rust, Goodell, Geo. Rust, Kanawha, and Heiko Rust, Richville, Minn.; Three sisters, Mrs. Dena Schult, Grano N. Dak., Mrs. Maggie Jacobs, Humbolt, S. Dak., and Mrs. Will Langlitz, Klemme. Also, she leaves many other relatives and friends.

Burial was made in the family lot, beside her husband and her son, in the Amsterdam Cemetery at Goodell.

How Prisoner Used Rats to Cheat Death

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

THE prisoner opened his eyes to blackness. Fears shook him as he thought of the Inquisition Judges. Feeling painfully about him he discovered that his clothes had been changed while he was unconscious and he now wore an unfamiliar robe. Thus does Edgar Allen Poe set the stage in "The Pit and the Pendulum."

What manner of place was this? Perhaps he was dead and this was eternity. Perhaps he was entombed alive. Panic seized him. He must know the size and shape of his prison! Cautiously he felt his way until he found the wall. Ripping a piece from his robe to mark the starting place, he began to creep along, counting the paces. A circuit of 50 yards indicated that it could not be a tomb. Now he would cross the cell. Boldly he started away from the wall, but his feet tripped in the robe and he fell prone.

Taut he lay. A queer sensation stole over him, for his head seemed to be touching nothing, to be in space. Reaching out he found a well or pit. Pit! Almost swooning he recalled stories of the Inquisition pits which the people in Toledo had lately heard.

Some time later and with an effort, his benumbed mind saw that the prison was now lighted. He saw

TURBULENT LIFE

The life of Poe is more turbulent than any story that he wrote. Scores of biographers have attempted to reveal something of the spirit of this lonely and passionate man. Although Poe died in his fortieth year, he left literary criticism that is excellent, and short stories and poems that are unexcelled for sheer artistry.

Later biographers have stated that Poe's reputation was worse than Poe. His difficulties at the University of Virginia and at West Point, and his being disinherited by his foster father gave him a name for recklessness when he was very young which the events of his later life did nothing to offset.

Poe lived from 1809 until 1849, attaining a literary fame in Europe as well as in America.

walls of metal, a stone floor, and a high ceiling. In the middle of the floor yawned the pit. How strange he felt—he could not move. Lying on his back he was bound to a wooden bench.

Pendulum Appears.

From the pit crept rats. The prisoner looked about him for some weapon. Only his arm was free from the elbow down, so that he could reach the plate of food on the floor. As the rats crept toward the plate he waved them away.

Again a noise, this one sounded like steam. Looking upward, he saw the silver object to be a pendulum that dropped slowly with each stroke. Then he divined the cunning of his captors. A blade of steel was descending slowly toward him. With days of mental torture and hours of physical torture, his death would be slow and horrible.

Time passed but he could not reckon how much. His mind alternated between fascination and insanity. Sometimes he laughed. Sometimes he cried. Sometimes he shrieked.

Now the blade was only a yard above him, then two feet above. Then one foot.

Rats Save Life.

Only inches separated them. Then desire for life surged through him so that he cried to heaven for help. Grasping the scraps of food he smeared the meat over his bonds as far as he could reach, using every drop of grease. Then he lay still. The rats had not before seen him lying so. They watched, crept closer, then jumped onto the bench. They were over his body in a flash. Voraciously they gnawed and chewed the bands of cloth. Greedily they tore it, trying to get the last drop of food.

The pendulum swung in long arcs, even closer. There was a pressure as the knife cut his robe. He did not dare move yet. Seconds passed, and he knew that his robe was cut through. As the blade reached the height of its arc, he lunged with all his force and fell free.

The pendulum stopped and swiftly rose to the ceiling. The prisoner lay as one lifeless, waiting for the next mode of death.

He did not wait long. The walls changed color, revealing hideous pictures which might have come from hell. Oppressive heat choked him as he saw that the walls were being heated and were coming together so that the cell was growing smaller. Their purpose was clear: to push him into the pit.

A crash sounded. The walls jerked away as with thunder. An arm clutched him. The French had conquered his enemies. He was saved.

Star Dust

- ★ Movie Whereabouts
- ★ How to Kiss a Girl
- ★ Toys for Crosby

By Virginia Vale

HAVEN'T you frequently felt, when you were at the movies, that you'd like to know where some of the scenes were taken? Harry Sherman, producer of the "Hopalong Cassidy" pictures, has solved that long-standing need.

Beginning with "Beneath Western Skies," each of these films will carry an announcement of the location where it was made.

It's a grand idea. But probably it won't be taken up to any extent, for imagine the shock if you were told, at the beginning of a picture whose scenes were laid in France, for instance, that it was filmed right along the good old California sea coast. Parts of that coast have been used so often that old-timers recognize them instantly.

It looks as if Metro had a winner in "Three Comrades," the sequel to "All Quiet on the Western Front." Robert Taylor really had a chance to be dramatic in this one, and he had to be good, for the other leading roles are played by Margaret Sullivan, Franchot Tone and Robert Young.

Robert Taylor

Wayne Morris has found, to his sorrow, that kissing a girl for the movies is pretty complicated and decidedly difficult. For instance, the director tells you to look down at the girl. Maybe you're not tall enough; then you have to stand on a box. (That doesn't worry Wayne, because he's plenty tall.) "You have to take the girl in your arms and kiss her," he says, "while the hairdresser stands by, glaring if you muss the girl's hair, and you mustn't wrinkle the collar of the girl's dress, and you must raise your arms so that your coat doesn't hike up in back; if it does, everything stops while the tailor is summoned to see what's wrong with the coat. Screen love is the bunk—but it's a living."

Peg La Centra is the joy of radio program directors. Not only does she sing (probably you've heard her on the "For Men Only" programs,) but she acts the female character parts in the dramatic sketches as well. She's been women and children with southern, Scotch and Swedish accents; all she needs to do when a different dialect is required is to hear someone who speaks it—she's a born mimic.

Jerry Belcher has broadcast interviews with interesting neighbors from almost every fair-sized town in the United States, and from some in Canada, but so far he hasn't interviewed any of the ones he knows best of all—those in his own corner of Texas.

Bing Crosby's wife went to New York to have a lot of fun and do a lot of shopping. And what do you suppose she bought? Clothes and toys for those four small Crosby boys! Somehow, the stores' other offerings just didn't seem to be very interesting.

ODDS AND ENDS—Gloria Blondell has been learning to sail a boat, with her brother-in-law, Dick Powell, doing the teaching. . . . Edward Arnold was weighed the other day at the studio and beamed when he found that he'd lost four pounds, due to the hot weather. . . . And then along came Lionel Barrymore and he beamed because he'd gained five. . . . James Stewart has 17 harmonicas, but he's still in the market for more. . . . Joan Bennett collects salt and pepper shakers. . . . Universal's budget for Deanna Durbin's next picture, "Cinderella," is $1,000,000—which will buy a lot of glass slippers. . . . John Payne is doing so well in "Garden of the Moon" that Warner Brothers have to your list of potential movie stars. . . . Have you a good idea for a radio program for children? A certain big cereal company is in the market for one. . . . Joa Penner recently escaped injury while all things! He was supposed to be thrown out of the ring by a wrestler. A splinter from the broken box used in sound effects missed him by a fraction of an inch.

Weaves Gain in Style Prestige

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

There is greater high style appeal in wash materials this season than ever before. The acceptance of glamorous, dressy lines (plain or printed) and spun rayons (new star shimmer) in the fabric firmament is one of the outstanding milestones that marks the progress of fashion.

You would see piques and cottons and ribbed or varied-type cottons, organdies, seersuckers (sheer or sturdy) and gay prints or plaid ginghams or the corded cottons, likewise cottons and laces "show off" in all their glory, tuning to every phase of fashion from simplest housedress, to a coat or swim suit, to most elaborate wedding ensembles, evening gowns or party frocks, get yourself invited to the spectacular presentation each year in various style centers—the Cotton Ball pays homage to "King Cotton." However, sans the Cotton Ball, you will not lose out in seeing this season's pageantry of cotton materials and other smart washables you've never seen before, for the stores are these days making a nationwide display of the lovely wash weaves fancy might picture.

It is really a very intriguing sight to know you can go to the "highbrow" affair and be dressed among the best dressed, in a simple wash voile or a checked batiste laden with valance edgings, or a tailored gingham that is fashioned decollete, with a skirt and bolero.

Not that we are losing sight of the element and the practicality of wash materials ever maintain in sportswear and general utility wear. That side of the question is subject so exhaustless we will attempt to touch upon it in these paragraphs.

There is, however, this concluding argument in favor of modern wash fabrics whether they be formal or utilitarian to the effect that if you are careful to buy the right sort of washables they carry with them the guarantee of being both non-shrinkable and non-crushable. It is indeed a comfort to the woman who is her own seamstress to know that from now on with these latest improvements in tub fabrics she can buy her patterns exactly the right size without having to allow for possible shrinkage.

In the picture we are showing three "reasons why" dresses of handsome wash materials are outstanding in the spring and summer style scene—charming enough to wear most anywhere in the day's social swirl, you'll agree. Fine hand-blocked linen glowing with colorful naturalistic rose and bud motif (a glorious fabric for the more dressy type of "onlooker" dress) fashions the center model. Miracle of miracles, such a "dressy" sport frock is exactly as practical as its more mundane sisters, for being pre-shrunk, its "lines" and its colors are permanent, regardless of numerous tubbings. And the same may be said for the gowns that complete the group.

For the dress to the right soft tailoring brings out the beauty of a most likable spun rayon fabric that you can rely upon to go through tubbings victoriously and that will capture your heart with its colorings and striking patternings. A Mexican motif on the print patterning, gay buttons, a bright raffia belt, carry out the blithe mood of the gay caballero linen print that tailors to perfection in the youthful dress to the left. Any young woman would do well to tuck such a frock away in her vacation trunk. It will insure conquests for her.

Who First Discovered Tiny Pacific Isles Worries Geographers

New York.—Minute Pacific islands, worthless to any but their inhabitants and a few small-scale traders until the advent of the transpacific air service, but today essential havens for the giant steel and alloy clippers that roar through the sky from continent to continent across the world's widest ocean, are causing geographers and statesmen sleepless nights while their ownership is being disputed.

Discovered, many of them, before the invention of the sextant and chronometer, so that their exact location was doubtful, these small land masses in the watery immensity have been relocated by modern methods. Ownership of the islands depends on who first claimed them. Claims made on the basis of old observations are likely to have wrong locations given because of the crudity of the instruments used. The problem now becomes one of determining just what islands were claimed for what nation.

Studies of old whale-ship logbooks are supplying geographers with many long-wanted clues to the discovery of these Pacific outposts. Dr. S. Wittemore Boggs, State department geographer, writing in the Geographical Review, cites a number of the difficulties encountered in this effort to determine just who discovered and claimed what.

Early Mariners Made Errors.
"Medana," Doctor Boggs says, "by dead reckoning, underestimated the distance from Peru to his 'Western Isles' (Solomon islands) by 2,000 miles. Errors of 1,000 miles in longitude were not uncommon in the Sixteenth century." Today, the pilot of a China Clipper must be able to "hit" an island only a mile in diameter by use of navigating instruments.

Log books of whaling and trading ships, diaries of captains and seamen, small-town newspapers, and records of bonds deposited by miners of guano on the far off Pacific islands are all being searched for evidence of discoveries and occupations which will make certain some of the now nebulous claims to the islands once called "American Polynesia."

"If the sources are ever adequately studied and reported on," states Doctor Boggs, "an interesting and significant chapter in American history will have been illuminated."

Cornstalk Provides Rival for Valuable Coal Tar

Dallas Texas.—Coal tar, highly valuable raw material by which organic chemists fashion scores of synthetic chemical products, has a new rival in lignin tar obtained from cornstalks, it was indicated in the report to the chemists' meeting here of Leon Bridger of the chemical engineering department of Iowa State university.

Synthetic resins, plastics, drugs, dyes, perfumes and flavors may be manufactured in the future from agricultural materials like cornstalks. By digesting cornstalks with strong alkalis like ordinary lye, in the absence of air, a black tar is produced which is somewhat similar to coal tar. It is, however, far richer in phenols. Moreover, the yield of tar is much greater and as a result about 40 times as much phenols are obtained from a pound of lignin as from a pound of coal. The preparation of phenols from the lignins by destructive distillation was discovered by Dr. Max Phillips of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Lotus Plants Grown From Seeds Centuries Old

Chicago.—Oriental lotus plants are being grown from seeds estimated to be from 300 to 500 years old, at the Field Museum of Natural History. The seeds were obtained from soil that had once been a lake bottom in southern Manchuria, near Port Arthur. Records show that the lake was drained some time between 160 and 250 years ago, and since then large willow trees have grown up on the ancient lake bed.

The seeds are believed to be the oldest that have ever been made to sprout.

Bronze Wall Paint

Moscow.—A new bronze-like wall paint prepared from the waste products of mercury plants has been developed here. Cheaper than oil paint, possessing a metal-like gloss reminiscent of silk, the new product is prepared by grinding and mixing mercury waste with adhesives, it is stated. The paint can be applied by brush or spray.

Here Is How to Make Your Own Diamonds But They Are Small

Dallas, Texas.—How chemists make real diamonds in the laboratory, synthetically, was described at the meeting of the American Chemical society here by Lewellyn D. Lloyd of the chemistry department of McPherson college, McPherson, Kansas.

Under the direction of Dr. J. Willard Hershey at McPherson synthetic diamonds have been prepared by successive groups of graduate students. Here is the simple formula for making diamonds:

Mix two parts of chemically pure iron filings with one part of pure sugar carbon, by volume. Place in a graphite crucible and heat to a temperature of at least 4,000 degrees Centigrade for a little over an hour. Then remove the crucible and plunge into a freezing solution of ice and salt brine. Treat the hardened mass with hot aqua regia for 300 hours to dissolve the iron and digest the residue as much as possible with various acids.

Tiny, But Real Diamonds.

Finally search the remaining carbon dust for the diamonds. Use a microscope in the search, for any diamonds will be very tiny. But they will be diamonds, which is what you started out to make.

But seriously, the simple statements above have required a great amount of research to bring them about. When Dr. Hershey began there was no way in which temperatures of 4,000 degrees could be controlled in a fashion required in the research. And there was the problem of building a fire brick furnace that could withstand the high temperatures.

The continued research has shown, Mr. Lloyd indicated, that the formation of the diamonds seems to depend on how fast is the cooling of the heated mass of iron and carbon. This cooling, and the tremendous pressures which are built up inside the iron-carbon mass during cooling, seem to turn black carbon into the transparent carbon which man calls a diamond.

As white hot molten iron cools to a red solid it expands, Mr. Lloyd said. As it cools from a red solid to room temperature it contracts. Thus the outside of the iron, which cools more rapidly than the inside of the mass, is contracting while the inside is still expanding. The carbon, dissolved in the iron, is thus subjected to a pressure estimated at 180,000 pounds to the square inch.

Death Rate Among Boys Increased by Use of Bicycles

New York.—The death rate among boys as a result of collisions between bicycles and automobiles has doubled within the past three years, statistics of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company for its industrial policy holders show.

In 1935 the death rate from this cause among boys from ten to fourteen years was 14.9 per million, while in 1937 it was 29.2. For the age group from fifteen to nineteen the rate rose from 20 per million in 1935 to 42.8 in 1937.

The increase, chiefly in the ages between thirteen and sixteen years, is due to increased numbers of boys at this age bicycling on the highways.

The most effective way to prevent these accidents would be the provision of more cycling paths, the life insurance company's health authorities point out. Other preventative measures suggested are laws, strictly enforced, requiring bicycles to carry lights at night, and education of adolescent boys to the dangers of cycling on the highways.

Cortez Mined Sulphur From Popocatepetl in 1519

Dallas, Texas.—Mexico, whose expropriation of foreign oil properties, has centered interest in its mineral resources, was itself a victim of "expropriation" more than 400 years ago, during its conquest by Hernando Cortez and his hardy band of Spaniards. In 1519, it was described to the Chemical society recently, Cortez sent his men into the crater of famed Mount Popocatepetl and obtained sulphur with which he was able to make gunpowder that helped him to conquer the country.

Donald B. Mason, chemical engineer of the Freeport Sulphur company, told of this episode from history in his review of the world's sulphur industry for the chemists. Cortez's exploit was the first production of sulphur in the Western hemisphere.

Glass Fabric Tape Used as Insulating Material

Pittsburgh.—Glass tape made from spun glass fibers is now being used experimentally by engineers of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing company here to increase the power and efficiency of electric motors.

Improved motor performance is claimed for the glass insulation, which is said to be moisture proof, fireproof and to have improved dielectric and mechanical strength characteristics.

CHOOSE POLKA DOT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

"Dots, dots, dots are repeating and repeating in the newer silks. Here pictured is a very up-to-the-moment young fashionable wearing a directoire double breasted daytime dress styled of smart polka dotted silk. You have the Paris angle of a leading summer style trend when you choose dotted patternings. Note the oval-shaped bib of gathered white tulle and a tie of white pique. The white pique directoire bonnet she wears is the "last word" in millinery showings.

SOME HIGH POINTS IN LATE FASHIONS

Dresses and coats alike have a tendency to pull fullness to the rear or the side with draping, plaits and panels. Long sleeves are by no means out, but many designers, like Lucile Paray, show elbow sleeves for everything, including coats.

Equally as popular as the skirt-and-jacket ensemble for sport and daytime wear is the dress with its own jacket or full-length coat. Jackets are moulded to the waist and unbelted; generally single-breasted, simple in line, but feminine in appearance. Down to the hips is the usual length, but Mainbocher shows them tunic length, and Chanel likes waist-length jackets and boleros, many with little bustle-like peplums.

Smartest Spring Dresses Are Seen Featuring Lace

Some of the smartest street and tailored dresses seen this spring are of lace. And not only the solid, fabric-like laces which have been and still are so popular, but the sheerer types which have heretofore been associated only with evening wear. These are seen in the simple one and two-piece versions of the classic day dresses. Sometimes they are all lace, and as often you see them in combinations of lace and fabric.

Popular Trimming

Pique for sports and informal wear; lace for dress-up occasions; organdie good the clock around—that's the way the fashion world divides the honors in trimming this season.

Evening Mode

Both the wide skirt and the straight line are popular for evening gowns.

Paris has the Street of the Fishing Cat, the Street of Bad Boys and the Street of the Little Pebbles. At Besancon, in the Jura mount, a square bears the name of Pichus. At Epinal, in the Vosges region, is the Allee of Vain Heart, while in Toulouse there is a thoroughfare known as Jealousy street. Another has the unusual appellation of Street of Watch Your Step. Still others, the Street of the Four Billiards, the Street of the Three Panquets, and finally the Street of the Thirteen Winds. In another part of France, in Beauvais, famed for its cathedral, is the Street of the Salt Atic and the Street of Climb With Regret. In Strasbourg is a street with a smelly name, at least, for it is known as Garlic street, there is also a Square of the Milk-Fed Pig

One of Oldest Universities

At Morelia, capital of Michoacan, Mexico, visitors are attracted to San Nicolas, oldest university in the Americas. Within the university is a small library that has no books less than 100 years old, and within the library is a tomb containing a two-foot coffin, wherein is the pickled heart of Melchor Ocampo Mexican patriot of the 1850s, who was slain by anti-government forces. There, also, is the hair of Ocampo, his neatly washed shirt and the trousers that were riddled by the firing squad. The visitor is shown his last will and testament "I being told that I am about to die, wish to name the following as my lawful daughters. I hereby adopt a fifth daughter who will share in my estate "

DUMONT FARM HOME DESTROYED BY BLAZE OF UNKNOWN ORIGIN

Fire of unknown origin destroyed the five room house on the John Clemens farm two and one-half miles north of town early Sunday morning. Mr. Clemens had returned home about midnight and started a kitchen fire for a bath.

About 5 o'clock in the morning he was awakened in the downstairs bedroom by a clatter of falling dishes and rushed to the kitchen only to find it practically burned off. The door to the living room was closed, so the smoke had not awakened him. As he had no phone he saved a few articles before going to the neighbors for help.

The house loss was partly covered by insurance and the furnishings were insured.

Lesson for June 5

SERVING BY PERSONAL DEVOTION TO CHRIST

LESSON TEXT—Mark 14:3-11, 27-31.
GOLDEN TEXT—She hath done what she could. Mark 14:8.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Mary's Present to Jesus
JUNIOR TOPIC—Mary's Love Gift
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Showing Our Love to Christ
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Heart of Christian Service.

"The love of Christ constraineth us" (II Cor. 5:14) was the all-sufficient moving force back of the greatest life of service rendered by any man. It is this personal devotion to the One whom we love "because he first loved us" (I John 4:19), which makes Christianity "different from all other religions. Christianity alone acts through this natural and deep hunger of mankind with a personalized religion which can be a satisfying joy and pleasure. Yet at this point Christians fail the most and make difficult the work of serving Jesus. They see religion as a job to be done, a form to be observed, a duty to be fulfilled" (W. R. King).

We need to renew that devotion to Christ which expresses itself in true worship. Prayer is too often asking for things; praise, thanksgiving for things (unless we become so engrossed with them that we forget to return thanks); and worship, which is a coming to God in adoration and thanksgiving for what He is rather than what He can give, is forgotten. Our Heavenly father wants us to show love toward Him. The act of Mary was pure personal devotion and worship, and its fragrance lives to this day.

I. Wasted—But Eternally Saved (vv. 3-9).

The dark hours of betrayal and death were before our Lord. All around Him was hostility. Even in the inner circle of the disciples there was misunderstanding and bickering. Mary (to be distinguished from the sinful woman of Luke 7) with the quick intuition of an understanding woman's heart knew what He was passing through, and with a magnificent act of love stood by Him in the fellowship of His sufferings. Dr. Morgan points out that it was "an impulsive act . . . born of the prodigality of love daring not to calculate." In the words of verse 9, Jesus declared that the gospel and that which this woman had done were to "stand side by side with each other forever. That keen intuition of love, that uncalculating outpouring of love, was Godlike, and an act in fellowship with the act of God by which a world is redeemed."

Judas, who was a thief, said she had wasted money that should be used for the poor (John 12:6). The other disciples thought well of his argument and murmured against her. But Jesus commended her. To be thrifty and frugal is commendable, but there are times when the heart should speak without being silenced by the drawing of purse strings.

II. Saved—But Eternally Lost (vv. 10, 11).

Judas betrayed Jesus for thirty pieces of silver. He "made" some money. The fact that he did it by betraying the Son of God may be worse in degree but is not worse in kind than the betrayal of the youth of our land by those who make merchandise of their eternal souls. A recent news item from England declared that church organizations were making money out of properties publicly known as centers of prostitution. The leaders deplored the situation, but said they could not prevent it without losing the income of the property. Why not lose every cent rather than be party to the betrayal of any man or woman?

III. Bold Words—But Weak Actions (vv. 27-31).

Verses 12-26 tell of the gathering of the Lord and His disciples for their last passover and for the establishment of the Lord's supper. As they left the sacred meeting and went out into the Mount of Olives Jesus foretold His betrayal and His coming denial by the disciples.

Peter, quick with his tongue, and bold in spirit, spake swelling words of devotion and assurance. Sadly the Lord foretold his threefold denial of that very night. Again Peter and all the disciples declared their willingness to die with Him. They undoubtedly meant what they said, but reckoning without the weakness of the flesh they failed Him.

The lesson that is written large in this story for you and for me is, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall" (I Cor. 10:12).

Complaining

We have no more right to put our discordant states of mind into the lives of those around us and rob them of their sunshine and brightness than we have to enter their houses and steal their silverware.—Julia Seton.

Fortitude and Duty

True fortitude I take to be the quiet possession of a man's self, and an undisturbed doing his duty, whatever evil besets or danger lies in his way.—Locke.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted

by William Bruckart

National Press Building

Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Almost before its operation is well started, the new federal crop law appears to be bogging down. From what I hear around the offices of senators and representatives at the Capitol, there is plenty of rebellion against the law which is supposed to plan agriculture on a scientific basis. Indeed, if one reads some of the letters, the conclusion is inescapable that Secretary Wallace and his "scientific planners" are going to have more trouble than a one-armed paper hanger in administering that law.

Crop Law
Bogs Down

It is difficult to provide a clear analysis of the trouble because of the complex character of the law, the confusion as to what can and cannot be done under its provisions, the varying attitude of the farmers who are its "beneficiaries" or its "victims," according to their views. The problem of telling what is wrong is made the more difficult because practical people seem to be unable to get anywhere in their efforts to get the "scientific planners" to recognize human nature as well as the material forces that must be considered in farming.

I have talked with a number of Department of Agriculture people; individuals who are supposed to understand the crop control law. They are most convincing; the pen-and-ink sketches that they have made leave only the question as to the reaction of human beings. The department propaganda surely is sufficient to smother any criticism. It is formidable. But it, also, leaves that question of human relationships, wind and weather, to be determined. Even in that regard, every now and then Secretary Wallace issues a statement or makes a speech which seems to do away with any possibility of trouble from those influences.

In the meantime, however, the cotton growers of the South went into a rebellion about the acreage allotment. They succeeded in getting, rather in forcing, Secretary Wallace to obtain congressional action allowing for an increase of 2,000,000 acres of production this year. He went after that legislative action as an emergency, and there was plenty of sentiment in congress for it, because as a matter of cold fact there is a very large majority in the house and senate who doubt that the new crop control law is going to work. To the request for additional acreage, therefore, there was only a little objection since additional acreage meant an obvious increase in general production with the chance for increased return to the farmers who grow the cotton.

Only lately, another tidal wave of rebellion developed. It came from the corn farmers. They had received their allotments of acreage and, like the cotton farmers, they found themselves between the upper and nether millstones. Their rebellion surely lent credence to statements in debate when congress was considering the bill that it conferred more power on a federal agency than ever ought to be conferred in a free country, and that there was no possibility of this power being exercised wisely since none knew its scope. The cotton and corn revolt, therefore, would seem to support assertions in the senate that the two chief sponsors of the bill, Senators Pope of Idaho and McGill of Kansas, had no understanding of the measure they were fighting for. At least, the explanations they made never were able to permeate what I am pleased to refer to as my brain.

The corn protestors made their first concentrated move only recently at Macomb, Ill., and the sum and substance of that meeting seems to be that those farmers have had their bellies full of compulsory crop control. They called it un-American; they described it as ruinous and pledged united action against its continuation.

Of course, no one in Washington can tell exactly how many farmers are in sympathy with the position taken at the Macomb meeting. There are 566 counties in what is designated as the corn area. Whether there is a large majority against the compulsory, dictatorial type of law, or whether there is only a sizable minority can not now be accurately stated. It can be stated as a definite fact, however, that farmers do not spend their money to go several hundred miles for a meeting of protest unless they are being badly damaged. Communists and other radicals would go dashing anywhere to hold a protest meeting, but farmers are not built that way. So the Macomb meeting must be taken seriously. It must be given additional weight as well because it followed on the heels of heated protests from the cotton growers.

As to the number of farmers represented in the Macomb meeting; that is to say, the farms and farmers represented by that protest, it might be enlightening to quote here the published statement of Claude

R. Wickard. Mr. Wickard is a divisional AAA director and one of the really close advisors to Secretary Wallace. Said Mr. Wickard: "Complaints have come against the corn allotments as high as 1,100 from one county."

Obviously there could not be that many complaints from more than a limited number of counties. But even if there are only half that number of protests from any considerable number of counties, the representatives and senators who voted for that legislation are bound to get plenty of kicks in the pants next November. And the plight of those members of the house and senate appears to be made worse by the statement attributed to the Department of Agriculture by Representative Andresen of Minnesota. Apparently, Mr. Andresen had been getting baskets full of kicks about the acreage allotments and went to the department to find out the facts. He returned to tell his colleagues on the floor of the house:

"The administration (AAA) will not yield an inch. The allotments have been made according to law and the farmers can take them or leave them."

In that statement, it seems to me, there is unbending arrogance and Mr. Andresen did the country a service when he repeated it to the house of representatives. It is an attitude of the dictator, of the worst sort of regimentation and it bears out the very thing which Senator Borah of Idaho predicted would happen when he opposed the legislation. Senator Borah's blast in the debate was, of course, branded as the criticism of a Republican, and it was his colleague, Senator Pope, the Idaho New Dealer, who was running about the country last year as the chief member of a committee of senators which was drumming up sentiment for the legislation before the extra session of congress called last November.

By way of prediction, I think there can be no doubt that the wheat farmers will find themselves shocked, instead of their wheat, when they get their acreage allotments later. They will find that the law is compulsory, not one of free co-operation as advertised when the bill was being debated in congress.

What is the reason for these conditions? Why is there rebellion among the farmers when, according to Secretary Wallace, there was a great majority for application of the crop control provisions? Frankly, I believe there are several factors to be considered as having influenced the passage and subsequent application of the compulsory regimentation.

In the first instance, it is quite apparent now that many representatives and senators were subjected to red hot steam from professional farm lobbyists, from Secretary Wallace and his lobbyists and from the minority of farmers who wanted something, anything, that would cause the government to pay them money. That belief is predicated upon a knowledge that the vast majority of the farmers are too busy with their own affairs to be active in politics. The legislators thought they were doing what the farmers wanted them to do.

In the second place, there surely was much misrepresentation about the legislation. At all times and on all occasions, Secretary Wallace and those who were seeking to put over the legislation vigorously stressed the statement that the provisions of the plan were voluntary. There was to be no compulsion in it; the farmers themselves were to decide; the department here in Washington would do exactly what the farmers wanted. All of which is very well and good, except that the farmers were not informed how much pressure could be exerted to make them volunteer. They either had to "volunteer" or find they could market none of their product without being penalized.

What is the result going to be? Congress soon will be quitting for the year, and there is no likelihood of any amendment that will alter the situation—unless something intervenes to keep congress in session far into the summer months. The only thing to look forward to, then, is the result of the fall elections. If the revolt that is represented by the protests of the cotton and corn farmers is widespread, it will show up in the votes at election time. Those who fought so hard for it in congress will meet trouble in primaries and in the election as well. To me, however, there is an added significance. These protests reveal a growing sentiment among farmers, a resentment, against having the federal government bureaucrats run the farms from Washington.

That Is Thrift

There are people who "can't keep a ten-dollar bill long enough to get finger prints on it." They admit they are extravagant.

In striking contrast are a few strange individuals who will go to almost any length to save a dime. They boast of their thrift That is not thrift.

Thrift is something more than "tightfistedness." Thrift is not a flower that blossoms in the miser's garret.

Thrift puts as much money in circulation as it does in the bank. Thrift spends. Thrift saves. But Thrift never wastes.

Gillette, Dickinson Win Nominations In Primary

QUIET AFFAIR IN THIS COUNTY MONDAY

One Hundred Fifteen Ballots Were Cast In Ell Township

One of the quietest primary elections in years passed into history with the closing of the polls at Klemme Monday night after one hundred and fifteen voters had cast their ballots.

No Fight In Hancock

There was no fight in this county as each candidate on the ticket had no opposition. In some counties there was keen competition among candidates for county office, both the republican and the democratic ticket.

Senators Only Battle

The only excitement on the state ticket was staged by both democrats and republicans. Senator Gillette, opposed by Wearin, held the spotlight for the past week, with Gillette winning the nomination. Dickinson and Thurston created the excitement on the republican ticket. Dickinson won the nomination handily.

Light Vote Here

The Ell township vote was one of the lightest in years. A total of 115 ballots were cast of which 83 were republican, 31 were democratic and 1 Farmer-Labor ballot was cast.

REGISTER & TRIBUNE TO HOLD ANNUAL CONVENTION

Local Boys Are Invited To Attend

Wayne Buseman and Elwyn Jackson of Klemme are among the Iowa boys who have been invited to attend the Ninth Annual Register and Tribune Farmer-Salesmen's convention and picnic in Des Moines, Monday, June 13.

In the morning carrier salesmen will hold a short business meeting followed by a special showing of the big three-ring Barnes-Carother's Circus in the Coliseum. After the circus a group picture will be taken which will appear later in the Des Moines Sunday Register photograph section.

A parade will be held starting at 10 a. m., winding through downtown Des Moines loop streets. Prizes totaling $125 will be offered for boys having the best stunts and costumes. This parade, the largest of its kind in America, is more than a mile long and was witnessed last year by over 40,000 people.

After the parade, carrier salesmen will be taken to Riverview amusement park for an afternoon of rides, shows and refreshments all free. They will also have the privilege of a free swim in the large Birdland Pool.

Delegates and members of their families who have also been invited to the convention will be identified by special badges.

M. E. Aid Next Thursday

The Methodist Ladies Aid Society will hold their next regular monthly meeting next week Thursday, June 16. Hostesses will be Mrs. Herman Paul, Mrs. W. F. Klemme and Mrs. Ralph Elder. There will be a quilt on, so come early and help sew.

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. What effects will the present program have on the consumer?

A. The present AAA program is expected to level out some of the violent swings in prices of corn and thus to partially stabilize prices of livestock and livestock products. This stabilization would prevent the consumer from enjoying extremely low prices in years of heavy production, but would also keep prices from going extremely high in years of short production. Through marketing control and corn loans, it will be possible to prevent prices from going as low in years of poor industrial conditions as they otherwise would. From the long time standpoint one of the greatest advantages to consumers is that of conserving the fertility of the soil. Slightly higher prices in years of poor business conditions and benefit payments are the price consumers pay for soil conservation.

Q. How does the AAA affect farm income in general?

A. (1) Stabilization of production, if effective, will lower livestock production by more fully using overhead and increasing the efficiency of feeding. (2) The stabilization of livestock production and prices will help to stabilize the incomes of farmers in general. Farm income will still be subject to fluctuations caused by changes in industrial conditions and the mass of farm products, but the program should level out some fluctuations caused by widely varying supplies. (3) Benefit payments from the Federal Treasury add to the income of farmers. In 1936 and 1937 payments to Iowa farmers averaged $25,000,000 a year, about 3 per cent of the total cash from income. (4) To the extent that stabilization of production in prices is effective, the program may result in a slightly higher return to farmers, since consumers will pay slightly more for relatively steady supplies than the will alternately large and small supplies.

Q. What has been the export and also import of corn since last fall's harvest?

A. Nearly 60 million bushels were exported up to the end of May. There have been no imports of corn in this period.

Q. How much land in the European countries has been put into production of grain since 1918?

Grain Acreage—
1909-13 Av. Millions—1936
Wheat	146.8	173.2
Corn	29.6	38.5

Q. How do tariffs compare on agricultural and industrial products?

A. Tariffs on most agricultural products are as high as, or higher than, tariffs upon industrial products in relation to value. However, in the case of most agricultural products, these tariffs are ineffective. For example, we have a tariff of 25 cents a bushel of corn. This tariff has only been effective in a very few years when United States production was greatly reduced because of drought. It is seen in the fact that corn prices dropped below the level of the tariff during the depression. In the case of wool and sugar, the tariff, however, is effective since the U. S. is on an import basis. A tariff cannot be effective unless the commodity is on import basis.

Survey Kills Chance For Lake; River Lacks Fall

KLEMMME'S DREAM OF NEARBY LAKE FADES AWAY AFTER SURVEY

For some time local sportsmen and others interested have been working on the proposition of building a small lake southeast of Klemme by building a dam near the Riverside school house and backing the water up through the White pasture and parts of land owned by the Blank estate and Emil Lau.

Thursday Dr. Colby of Forest City, member of the State Conservation and Planning Board; S. M. Helgeland, State Surveyor; and Oscar Johnson, of Kanawha and Representative for Hancock County, were in Klemme meeting with those interested and going over the proposed lake site. After Mr. Helgeland had surveyed the area he found there was not enough fall in the Iowa River to warrant building a dam.

Mr. Helgeland found that there was but 1.18 ft. fall from the railroad bridge to the proposed dam. In other words, in order to have even a small lake in the area it would be necessary to dredge out a large "pocket" between the railroad bridge and the dam.

If the water was raised 5.56 feet from the stage Thursday it would be even with the foundation at the town disposal plant. So it is readily understood that building even a small dam would flood too great an area and the lake would still lack deep water.

Had the survey proven satisfactory, work on the project would have been started in a very short time as the location is ideal for a small lake.

FIVE POINT CONTROL PLAN SUGGESTED FOR FIGHT AGAINST WEEDS

Emil Damm, Hancock county weed commissioner, and T. C. Petersen, county agent, today urged farmers to join in a 5-point program aimed at eradication of noxious weeds.

"A united front in fighting weeds is absolutely essential if the 1938 weed control program is to be effective. Cooperation in these five points will go a long way toward cutting the county's weed bill."

1. Be careful of the seed you plant. Noxious weed seeds are frequently carried by crop seeds. Samples may be tested at the Iowa State College Seed Laboratory.

2. Watch for new weeds on your farm or roadside. If "strange" ones appear, bring them to the county agent's office for identification. Serious infestations of new weeds may be avoided by prompt steps at the very outset.

3. Use recommended chemicals to destroy small areas of noxious weeds. Use summer fallow and smother crops on large areas.

4. Report the size and location of areas of noxious weeds on your farm to the weed commissioner, who is making a weed map of the county.

5. Urge your neighbors to cooperate in weed control.

RANK OAT GROWTH MAY KILL SPRING SEEDINGS

Examine Fields Now and if Plants Are Spindling Clip Oats Now or Cut for Hay Later

Oats are making a rank growth and where they were seeded as a nurse crop for legumes there is a real danger that the legume seedlings will be lost if the oat crop is allowed to mature and is harvested for grain. There is a special danger that the spring seedlings will be lost if the oats were seeded at a normal or above normal rate. J. C. Eldredge, Iowa State College agronomist, points out.

If legumes have been seeded with oats, examine the field carefully at this time to determine the condition of the seedlings, Eldredge suggests. If the clover or alfalfa plants are making a tall, spindling growth, it is a danger sign. If a dry spell sets in the rank oat growth will use up most of the available moisture, and when the crop is cut for grain the legume seedlings, lacking hardiness and with poorly developed root systems, will die.

To be sure of saving the legume crop where the oats seems to be threatening it, either clip the oats at this time or cut the oats for hay when it is heading out, Mr. Eldredge advises. To clip the oats, set the sickle as high as possible to avoid cutting any more of the seedlings than necessary.

There is a possibility that oats clipped at this time may grow out in time to still make a grain crop. In addition, the seedlings will have had the benefit of direct sunlight. In the more common practice of cutting oats for hay the crop should also be cut high.

Legume seedlings have had a favorable spring for getting established, and in Mr. Eldredge's opinion, a crop of oats bringing 20 or more cents a bushel may well be sacrificed to save legume seedlings, the seed for which cost upwards of $25 a bushel.

Lovely New Sheer Swiss Cottons

you to the charming fashions pictured.

The ensemble shown to the left makes a costume ideal to wear now and throughout the summer wherever daytime activities may take you. Lustrous, transparent black Swiss organdie makes a tiny separate bolero and over skirt that buttons at a wide waistband over a softly draped frock of Swiss voile, embroidered in a trailing vine pattern in bright red to complete a charming costume of tailored but feminine charm. You could wear the black bolero and skirt over other light dresses.

A most unusual print design adds to the interest of the party frock for a young girl, as you see centered in the picture. The Swiss organdie that fashions it has large white flowers imprinted against a background of tiny flowers in brilliant shades of rose against a navy blue background. The crush sash is of deep rose taffeta, tying in a youthful bow at the back. The shoulder corsage is a single huge pink and rose shaded taffeta flower.

A dainty frock for a dainty miss is the fitted and flared party dress to the right. It is of clear white Swiss organdie with pin dots of deep blue. The grosgrain ribbon bows at the puffed sleeves and down the front repeat the deep blue accent.

The wide range of organdie types brought out this season will both amaze and delight you. Many new print ideas give fresh appeal to organdies. Mentioning only a few, there is a print design of little white plumes scattered over a pink ground you'll love. A small spaced paisley motif in deep rich colors on white is very attractive. Perhaps the most notable of all are the chiffon organdies in pastel color shadow printed in white, navy or black in a very exquisite and realistic lace patterning with floral motifs scattered over the background.

A COAT CLASSIC

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here you have illustrated the coat classic that is a favorite type this season. White smooth wool velour is the handsome cloaking that fashions it. You will find that it slips over sports or dressy frocks with equal charm. This style is ever so good-looking in the new beige, wheat-tone, copper or mustard wools, to wear over black or navy dresses. Of course you know by this time that no wardrobe is complete this season that does not include a separate coat that makes high-quality wool weave and classic simplicity its fashion highspots.

NEW CLOTHES FEEL GRECIAN INFLUENCE

The new afternoon and evening clothes show the graceful influence of Greek and Brahmin drapery. Shirring, gathering, tier-like effects on skirts, subtly accent hip and bosom lines. Scarves float like wings from the shoulders, drape over the head, or swathe the shoulders and neck of an evening décolleté.

Prints are plentiful—dots and stripes lead the field, and the newest thing is to use them in combination. The flower prints range from tiny conventional sprigs to huge exotic blooms a foot across in size.

Embroidery, Applique Trim

Frocks for Early Summer

Important for early summer dresses are embroidered or applique trims in dull or vibrant colors. Tiny red, turquoise and green stitching form stripes on Paquin's latest crepe dress from yoke to hem. The sleeves are trimmed with the same smart detail. Two drapes from the shoulders disappear into slots and reappear at the yoke where the stitching begins.

Minute pearls and gold thread form a geometric pattern on Nina Ricci's afternoon frock around the collarless neck and on the border of the wide sash which ties at the waist, Spanish style.

Bows Give Feminine Touch

to Simple Daytime Frocks

Designers have taken to trimming even the simplest daytime frocks with tiny bows of velvet or grosgrain ribbon. Sometimes the bows are posed on horizontal bands of the ribbon that extend to each side in military precision.

Tiny lover bowknots made of narrow ribbon frequently are scattered over frocks made of net or other sheer.

Lesson for June

FACING THE SUPREMACY OF SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 14:32-36
GOLDEN TEXT—Not what thou wilt, but what God will.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus in Gethsemane
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Lord's Supper COURAGE IN THE FACE OF DEATH
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULTS—The Challenge of God's Will

No man has ever faced a crisis as Jesus met in the Garden of Gethsemane, for He was God incarnate in order to save the sinners of the world. Never fully understood the soul involved when God "was to be sin for us, who knew that we might be made righteous of God in him" (5:21). It is, therefore, true that we may never say that we have "through Gethsemane." But a very real sense in which the Lord's experience is shared by His disciples, in a lesser degree, ordinary human beings.

Our lesson brings before us the closing scene of Thursday the crucifixion. The day was crowded with important events, the revelation that the traitor among the twelve, the substitution of the Lord's precious words of the upper room, the intercessory prayer in the Garden.

I. Exceeding Sorrowful

36). The text uses many words to convey the depth of His soul as though it were impossible to express it in the faulty human speech. So it is, for our Lord experienced something far more serious than a dread of death. He was not a coward who was not afraid to die. He was about to have put upon His sinlessness the stain and shame of the world's sins. Little that He was "sorrowful to death" (v. 34).

II. Alone with God (vv. 35-36)

Jesus took with Him into the Garden of Gethsemane those who were closest to Him in the circle of disciples. He counted their fellowship and sympathy His hour of anguish. He had them near Him, to know they were there to watch and even though they could not share His holy burden, was to be a comfort to Him. We try to do for one another in hours of burden and disappointment, but much greater was the opportunity of these three, and how joyously they failed. The Spirit willing (v. 38), but the flesh the upper hand, and they slept as alone with His Father, who prayed that if it were possible, hour might pass from Him, true and beautiful submission, "not what I will, but what thou wilt."

The follower of Jesus will find this experience, too. While he never find it to be true that the nothing more precious than his friends God gives him, he must prepare himself to expect the of flesh to fail him. There is more bitter experience in his relationships than to count on who should stand by, come, may, and to find that they slept through our hour of soul-trial.

III. Betrayed by a Kiss (v. 46)

To betray the one who had nothing but good, who had him and served him even in the washing of his feet, this would be far more than one could expect of even the sin-black heart of a Judas. But he filled measure of his ignominy to flowing by betraying his Lord the sign of affection—a kiss.

We know full well that we not stand on the same ground as our Lord even here, for, when He had done nothing to merit a betrayal, we at our best are not to stand forth without fault. Nevertheless, great is the hurt when we face the betrayals of life. It is to be one whom we have befriended who has been the object of our loving thought and care, and when the hour when he thinks to himself some advantage or a some fancied wrong strikes the back, even as he smilingly fesses to be a friend. Shall we embittered in soul and give for like? God forbid! Let us say as Jesus did to Judas, "Wherefore art thou come?" (26:50.)

If We Knew All

The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: and the faithful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is to be saved from the evil to come, shall enter into peace.—Isa. 57:1

Secret of Holiness

They ask me for secrets of holiness. For myself I know no secret but to love God, with all my heart and my neighbor (who is all in all) as myself.

sions, recessions and crises within an immediate victim of his denunciation. He says this business of waiting for "economic cycles" is foolishness.

Throughout the past decade's topsy-turvy experimentation in social and economic reform, the LaFol-lettes have remained pretty much in the background. In Wisconsin, Governor Phil has done his own experimenting and in Washington Senator Bob has listened carefully to each successive crop of reform proposals.

Comes the Announcement.

In 1938, at a strategic moment when the New Deal shows signs of bogging down, when the Republican party still lacks leadership and the country cries with discontent, Phil LaFollette has launched the National Progressive party with an eye to pushing himself to the White House by 1948. Perhaps it will be sooner.

On the surface Bob LaFollette,

Senator Bob LaFollette, lacking his brother's salesmanship ability, nevertheless knows political Washington so thoroughly that he will be valuable in the campaign.

well versed with official Washington, is the logical National Progressive candidate. But the brothers recognize that Bob is the politician and legislator while Phil is an executive.

This is a queer trick of fate because old Bob LaFollette intended that his namesake should carry on the family tradition. Young Bob went to Washington immediately after he finished college and became his father's secretary. In 1924 he managed the LaFollette presidential campaign and found himself in the heat of politics while brother Phil was twiddling his thumbs.

Phil once thought of entering the ministry. His wise old father discouraged him from politics but his heart was in it. In 1924, at the ripe age of twenty-seven, he ran for district attorney of Dane county, delivering not a single speech for himself because the elder LaFollette needed his help in the presidential campaign. But Phil won.

Wisconsin's Wonder Boy.

The next year his father died and Phil's ambitions were nipped in the bud when young Bob ascended to the senate. It looked like a political fade-out but Phil won the Republican nomination for governor in 1930 and has been at Madison for three terms since.

Wisconsin's allegiance to the La-Follette tradition is a thing of wonder. In November, 1928, young Bob came up for election the first time and was sent back to the senate with a plurality of 400,000. Yet Wisconsin gave its electoral vote that year to Herbert Hoover, for whom the LaFollettes had said not a single good word.

Governor Phil is by no means an idol with his constituents. The past two years have seen many scraps from which he has emerged victorious but badly scratched. In most of these he has shown a judgment for diplomacy that would credit any President. One of his accomplishments was legislative enactment of a governmental reorganization bill, the same stumbling block over which President Roosevelt tripped last winter.

"Trigger" La Follette.

The governor's private life and hobbies account for much of his popular appeal. He is a devotee of Americana of the Sam Houston period and is also a student of Napoleon.

His quick-on-the-trigger aptitude in speech-making wins him many converts. Never caught short, he faced a momentary crisis when addressing a crowd of Farmer-Laborites in Iowa a few weeks ago. A bench collapsed noisily, spilling its occupants to the ground.

"That," cracked Phil, "must have been the Democratic or Republican platform."

The next few months may see Governor Phil and Senator Bob carrying their National Progressive party to the nation. The two brothers never disagree on major points, so America's farmers, laboring men and small business men are apt to be offered two Messiahs instead of one, each preaching the same political doctrine.

To them may fall the task of ce-menting our growing crop of malcontents into a unified political group, of soothing Labor's quarrels with the farmer and the corner grocery man. To their flag may rally a strange mixture of men and women, disillusioned followers of defeated third party movements.

But Phil will be the dominant La-Follette, a dynamic crusader in whom more than one aging Progressive will see a carbon copy of old Fighting Bob LaFollette, the man who wanted his son to be a minister.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLOC WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—It is curious how trade winds blow in politics. We, here in Washington, have just witnessed what can well be called a phenomenon. It grows out of the primaries in two widely separated states, Florida and Pennsylvania.
The fact that it was a Democratic primary in each instance, however, makes possible this analysis and discussion of details.

Taking up the primaries in their order, there was the primary in Florida where Sen. Claude Pepper, 100 per cent New Dealer, indorser of Townsend old-age pensions, and himself indorsed by James Roosevelt, son and secretary of the President, licked the pants off of his challengers. He polled more votes than Rep. J. Mark Wilcox and former Gov. Dave Sholtz combined. It was, without doubt, a New Deal victory for which the President can claim justifiable credit.

The second primary was that in Pennsylvania where there were three candidates for the United States senatorial nomination among the Democrats and three for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination. There were two candidates for the Republican nomination for each of these offices, as well, but that fact will be treated later.

Few party primaries in modern times developed the bitterness that flamed in the Democratic test in Pennsylvania. It was the first time that organized labor, as such, had come out into the open with avowed candidates and it was the first time Democratic National Chairman Farley has taken a hand in attempting to tell the voters of a state what to do. In addition, there was a state party committee which insisted upon selecting a slate of candidates in regulation boss fashion. So there were all of the elements of a rough fight, and it happened according to forecast.

Mr. Farley made an eleventh-hour public appeal to the Democrats of Pennsylvania "for harmony." He asked them to nominate Governor
Earle for the United States senate.
Governor Earle was the choice of the state committee faction. Mr.
Farley also asked that the Pennsylvanians nominate Lieut. Gov.
Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers, for the governorship. Mr. Kennedy was thrown overboard by the state committee but he had the open indorsement of John L. Lewis, head of the C. I. O. labor union. He also had the backing of Sen. Joseph Guffey, who has constantly served as President Roosevelt's voice in the United States senate. The Farley recommendation thus cast out Charles Alvin Jones of Pittsburgh, state committee selection for the governorship, and it threw Mayor S. Davis Wilson of Philadelphia into the discard as far as the Democratic senatorial nomination was concerned. Mayor Wilson was a Lewis-C. I. O. Guffey candidate.

The Farley announcement, made on the day before the primary, built up resentment even from the men he indorsed. Governor Earle barked loud and long; so did Lieutenant Governor Kennedy.
Mr. Earle won. Mr. Kennedy lost. Mr. Jones won, and shouted about it. Mayor Wilson lost and bellowed about the interference.
And after the smoke cleared away,
Mr. Farley said promptly, in effect, "Let's all get together and elect our Democratic candidates."

Biting Words

John D. M. Hamilton, Republican national chairman, wrote a statement while the sun was coming up on the day following the primary. He bounced biting words right off of Mr. Farley's head. In substance, he said the Pennsylvania primary showed: 1. The voters of any state resent interference from the national headquarters as regards their party nominees. 2. The voters of Pennsylvania showed they will have nothing to do with John L.
Lewis, despite the fact that probably that state is the most tightly organized for the C. I. O. of any state in the country. 3. The Democrats of Pennsylvania are tiring of the "crack-pot brains" of the Roosevelt administration.

Mr. Hamilton, further, called attention to the fact that two present Democratic members of the house of representatives were defeated for renomination. Representative Stack, an admirer of Father Coughlin, radical radio priest, and Representative Crosby, author of Townsend plan bills in the house, were supplanted. The Republican chairman sought to connect their defeat with a trend away from radicalism which he says is inherent in the New Deal, because Mr. Stack sometimes went beyond New Deal ground.

Now, as to the Republican battle:
James J. Davis, present senator, was renominated over G. Mason Owlett, backed by the Republican state committee, and Judge Arthur H. James was nominated for the governorship over former Gov. Gifford Pinchot, who, like Mr. Kennedy, was approved by John L.

Lewis and his C. I. O. as acceptable.
So again, the voters took things into their own hands and their state committee selections were taken on where the voters liked the man.

But, to get back to the premise upon which I started, it has been most interesting to note the veering of the political winds. Shortly after the Florida primary, there was a hurrying for cover by dozens of Democrats in the house of representatives. They thought they saw in those results a swing again to the New Deal, a restoration of the President's popularity. New Deal spokesmen around Washington did not let any grass grow under their feet. They used the Florida results to advantage. In good political fashion, they whispered and hinted and sometimes said out loud that the boys who went against the New Deal would get their spanking.

And to their credit, it must be said they did a good job. For example, I am convinced the vicious wages and hours bill that was locked so securely in a house committee would never have been brought out except for the reaction from the Florida primary. Seldom, if ever, has there been so much haste in signing a petition for report of a bill as was observed in the case of that legislation. Generally speaking, I believe it is a fact that New Deal backbones were stiffened all along the line by Senator Pepper's renomination—which assures election in Florida.

Came then the Pennsylvania primary, a vote that was preceded by charges of graft, bribery, bossism, etc., and the Farley "harmony attempt" in the day before the polls were taken. And came then a sudden revival of the fight that anti-
New Deal Democrats were making prior to Florida's vote. Maybe the Florida vote did not involve clear-cut New Deal issues; maybe it was Pepper's machine, maybe it was this and maybe it was that—anyway, their thoughts were running:
Maybe Pennsylvania is a better barometer. And each one is analyzing that vote in an effort to apply the result to his own district.

Whatever their conclusions are, there is one thing definitely established. Organized labor's most ambitious political effort flopped. It was washed out of the road. The Pennsylvania rout of organized labor of the John Lewis brand is made the more significant because of the link with the White House disclosed through Mr. Farley's indorsement of Mr. Kennedy. It may be, of course, that President Roosevelt did keep hands off, but it is quite another matter to convince the average person that the White House was not involved. For one thing, the Pennsylvania results seem to show that the John Lewis claims of political strength can be discarded as so much hokey.

Another thing to remember about the Democratic primary results in Pennsylvania projects itself into the future—to 1940, to be exact. The victory by Mr. Jones in the fight for the gubernatorial nomination destroys the control of Pennsylvania Democrats so long exercised by Senator Guffey. He cannot be called the boss again under any stretch of the imagination. And when it is time for election of a successor to Mr.
Guffey, the best political judgment available predicts Mr. Guffey's disappearance as an entrant. As to the 1940 projection, attention ought to be directed to the fact that probably Mr. Jones, and not Mr. Guffey, will determine what Democratic presidential aspirant shall have the great block of 72 votes in the national convention. This seems certain whether Mr. Jones wins or loses the race for governor. He is established as head of the party. All of the indications now perceptible promise an alignment of the Jones faction, now controlling, with the more conservative group nationally, including Sen. Pat Harrison, Vice President Garner and men of that type. So, it is seen that the Pennsylvania primary can, and is almost certain to, have an important reaction on national Democratic strategy.

In addition to these circumstances, there is talk going around now that the anti-
New Deal faction in Kentucky is determined to do business. In that state, of course, Senator Barkley, the Roosevelt majority leader in the senate whose selection to the job was made in the famous "Dear Alben" letter, has a tremendous bulge. Cold analysis of the situation does not afford much comfort for the forces of A. B. "Happy" Chandler, who seeks the Barkley scalp. The point is, however, that anti-New Dealers among the Democrats think the Pennsylvania situation may possibly be reproduced in Kentucky.

WHY COUNTRY EDITORS GET RICH

Bill Williams, editor of the Garner Leader, had the following clipping in his newspaper a few weeks ago. It pretty well fits conditions in every newspaper office. Here it is:

"A child is born. The attending physician gets $10, the editor gives the loud-mouthed youngster and the happy parents a send-off and gets '0'. When it is christened the clergyman gets $10. The editor publishes it and gets '$00'. She grows up and gets married. The editor publishes another long-winded article and tells a dozen lies about the beautiful, accomplished bride. The clergyman gets another $10 and a piece of cake. The editor gets '$000'. In the course of time she dies. The doctor gets $25 to $100. The undertaker from $300 to $500. The editor publishes the obituary two columns long, lodge and society resolutions and a lot of poetry and gets '$0000'. No wonder he is rich."

Most men try to put off everything but a good time.

SUDAN HARD TO BEAT FOR

EMERGENCY PASTURE CROP
Sudan grass is still one of Iowa's best emergency pasture crops for the hot July and August period when bluegrass pastures are parched and dry. It's "tops" as an emergency crop for sheep and cattle and ranks second only to rape as an emergency pasture for hogs.

This is the statement which Horace Cheyney, extension agronomist at Iowa State College, makes this week in advising farmers needing emergency pastures to "plant sudan grass immediately." The best time to seed sudan grass is from the middle of May to the middle of June, he says, and the best rate is at least 15 pounds per acre.

Sudan grass may be seeded either by broadcasting and harrowing or by drilling in narrow rows. It grows best on a seedbed prepared in much the same way as a seedbed for corn.

Most farmers claim that sudan grass will carry from one to three head of stock per acre, depending upon the fertility of the soil and upon the season. Sudan grass should never be pastured before it is at least a foot and preferably two feet high. This to avoid the danger of poisoning.

When sudan grass is small, if it is injured by drouth or frost there is danger of poisoning from the prussic acid the plant may then contain, Cheyney warns.

For this reason cattle should be watched carefully when first turned into sudan. If the animals stop eating after the first 15 minutes it usually indicates the grass contains a rather high amount of prussic acid and the animals should be removed.

It is the short, dark green sudan grass which is dangerous. Once the grass has made sufficient growth there is little danger of poisoning until frost. Second growth grass which springs up after a frost or hay crop is especially dangerous.

Tall sudan grass cut for hay and thoroughly cured is not likely to cause poisoning. Sudan hay is about equal to timothy in feed value.

Pastured sudan grass is not considered soil depleting under the AAA program.

Wreck of the "Griffon"
According to Farmer's History of Detroit, the "Griffon," the first sailing ship on the Great Lakes, weighed between 45 and 60 tons and was armed with five cannon. She was built by La Salle at the mouth of Cayuga creek near Niagara in the spring of 1679 and was launched in May of that year. After several short trial trips, she started her first real voyage on August 7, 1679, with 32 persons aboard. She reached Detroit on August 10 and continued through the lakes to Washington island in Lake Michigan. After taking on a load of furs, she sailed on September 18 and was never seen again, but portions of the wreck were found among the islands at the northern end of the lake.

WHEN LIFE DEPENDS ON TIRE SAFETY

On May 30, Floyd Roberts shattered all track records for the 500-mile Indianapolis Race, averaging 117.2 miles an hour using Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires.

IT'S ALWAYS Firestone

FOR 19 CONSECUTIVE YEARS THE WINNERS OF THE INDIANAPOLIS 500-MILE RACE HAVE PROTECTED THEIR LIVES WITH FIRESTONE GUM-DIPPED TIRES

THEY said it couldn't be done — that tires could not withstand the torture of the new high speeds. Yet Floyd Roberts set a new record, at this year's Indianapolis Race, averaging 117.2 miles an hour for the 500 miles on Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires.

With the sun-baked brick of the straight-away and the granite-hard surface of the turns pulling and grinding at their tires, 33 daring drivers, every one on Firestone Tires; waged a thrilling battle for gold and glory. Never before have tires been called upon to take such punishment. Never in all the history of the motor car has tire safety been put to such a gruelling test. Yet not one tire failed — not one single cord loosened — because Gum-Dipping, that famous Firestone patented process saturates and coats every cotton fiber in every cord in every ply with liquid rubber counteracting the tire-destroying internal friction and heat that ordinarily cause blowouts.

Why risk your life and the lives of others on unsafe tires? Join the Firestone SAVE A LIFE Campaign today by equipping your car with Firestone Triple-Safe Tires — the only tires made that are safety-proved on the speedways for your protection on the highways.

Device That Tests Surface Accuracy Is Mechanical Marvel

By WATSON DAVIS

New York.—A human hair about 15 feet across. That is what it would be if it were magnified with one of the latest testing devices for automobile parts.

One of the wonders of modern mechanical engineering is the routine measurement of finely finished surfaces so smooth that magnification of the order of 50,000 times is necessary. So exacting have become the demands of modern machine shop practice that the working surfaces of anti-friction bearings, for instance, require great accuracy and smoothness. Surface irregularities less than a hundred thousandth of an inch (10 micro-inches) are cause for rejection.

A machine that measures so finely with the rapidity necessary in actual production, has been achieved. The profilometer, as it is called, has a tiny point that traces the almost molecular surface irregularities. This varies the current flowing through a magnet and this current is sent through special amplifiers and circuits. Thus, electrically, there is created that high magnification necessary.

Record Written by Light.

The magnified replica of the surface desired is the light-written record of the oscillograph into which the current is fed. If a permanent record is desired, a motion picture camera is aimed at the waving light line of the oscillograph.

How far machine shop precision has traveled during the age of power will be realized when it is recalled that Watt, inventor of the steam engine, was elated when he found that Wilkinson's boring mill could machine an engine cylinder true to within the thickness of a shilling.

The dawn of precision in machinery came when the system of interchangeable parts was adopted early in the last century. Arms factories in Connecticut pioneered in measuring accurately with gauges.

With accuracy increased many fold, this is the principle that underlies the machine age of today.

Asbestos Is Costly and America Hasn't Much of It

Washington. — Asbestos, magic wicking material once used in the non-burnable wicks of the ever-burning lamps tended by the Vestal virgins of Rome, and now a part of nearly every farmer's oil stove, is not a single mineral, but a trade term applied to a number of fibrous materials. Dr. Oliver Bowles, of the United States bureau of mines, told the Geological society of Washington.

Commonly found associated with serpentine rocks, from which it is formed by alteration and recrystallization, asbestos varies in value from $750 a ton for inch-long fibers of chrysotile (a very high grade), down to less than the cost of mining for the short-fibered poorer grades. The greatest problem in asbestos production, Doctor Bowles said, is to separate the asbestos from the rock without breaking the fibers.

Not well supplied with asbestos, the United States has commercially-productive deposits only in Vermont and Arizona. Most of our supply today is imported from Canada, with the other producers — South Africa and Soviet Russia—sending small amounts.

Hot River Carries Away Radioactive Materials

New York.—Hot river, draining Mammoth Hot Springs, famed thermal region in Yellowstone, carries away radioactive materials equivalent to 40 grams of radium a year (worth $800,000 if extracted) Drs. Herman Schlundt and Gerald F. Breckenridge, University of Missouri geologists, find.

Draming the deeply buried rocks of some of their heat-producing radium content, these hot spring waters, of unknown origin, do not contain much radium per quart, but over a year's time the amount of radon, a radium by-product, removed is very great. Other hot springs, outside of Yellowstone park, also contain radium, suggesting that chemical changes deep in the earth are substantially the same wherever hot springs occur.

Oil Menaces Fish

Baltimore. — Offshore oil wells now being drilled in large numbers along the Texas coast were pointed out as menaces to the state's resources of oysters, shrimp, fish, and waterfowl, by Richard H. Pough of the National Association of Audubon Societies, speaking here before the North American Wildlife conference.

'Problem Child' Needs New Teaching Methods Until Mind Matures

By MARJORIE VAN DE WATER

Detroit, Mich.—Defiant, restless, truant, and subject to temper outbursts. That is a picture of what school officials know as a "problem child."

It is also a typical picture of a child who has failed in learning to read, write and cipher—particularly to read, Dr. Charles L. Vaughn, of Detroit's Psychopathic clinic, has learned from a study of boys at the Wayne County Training school.

These boys were from twelve to fifteen years old and yet tests showed them to be below grade three in reading. In other words they had spent about nine years in school trying to learn to read without success.

It is hard to realize the insult that such a prolonged failure is to the sensitive nature of a child. If he cannot learn to add, that is to some extent at least a private matter between his teacher, his parents, and himself. He can hide those arithmetic papers with the damning zeros.

But when it comes to reading, he is asked to stand up before the whole class and demonstrate almost daily his weakness.

Shouldn't Be Humiliated.

If you have struggled with an income tax blank, a difficult crossword puzzle, or one of those baffling Oriental cut-up puzzles, you know the exasperation that can result from failure even when no audience jeers at your mistakes.

A child should not be forced to learn to read and to try to master other school subjects until his mind has matured sufficiently to make it possible, is Doctor Vaughn's conclusion.

Teachers should try new methods of instruction with the child who is not learning, or else the child should be given another type of program, such as handwork, that he can master.

No child should be forced to submit to ignominious failure until his whole personality is disorganized and catastrophe brings him to the psychopathic clinic.

Future Apple Trees Will Grow From Own Roots

Washington.—Apple trees of the future, breaking precedent with apple trees of today, may grow on their own roots, experiments conducted by United States Department of Agriculture scientists indicate.

Government experimenters have succeeded in inducing stem cuttings of desirable varieties of apples to send out roots, Dr. F. E. Gardner, in charge of nursery stock investigation for the bureau of plant industry, reports. In the past the apple tree has been an assembled article with the fruit-producing part grafted on to a common root-stock such as the French crab variety. This was necessary because seedlings do not produce true to variety and because cuttings of stem tissues would not take root.

Springtime taping of the growing root with black tape right up to the growing tip or enclosing the shoot in a black tube so changes the shoot that it will take root when removed from the tree in the fall. It is only necessary to make the basal cut, Doctor Gardner declares, before planting.

Double Set of Ears Given Salamander by Grafting

Pittsburgh.—Four ears, growing where normally only two would grow, were what Prof. Ross G. Harrison of Yale university, newly-elected chairman of the National Research council in Washington, D. C., reported here at the meeting of the American Association of Anatomists.

Professor Harrison obtained his extraordinary results through tissue-grafting experiments with early embryonic stages of salamanders. A part of the side of the head region was removed, and a piece of tissue from the abdominal region set into its place. Organ-forming influences from surrounding head tissues caused the development of small but otherwise normal internal ear structures in this transplanted piece.

Irish Was Spoken in Germany 1,200 Years Ago

Berlin.—Irish missionaries who came to central Germany from the Sixth to the Eighth century, bringing the gospel that St. Patrick had carried to them still earlier, had no difficulty in making themselves understood. There were plenty of people in Germany at that time who spoke a Celtic language very similar to ancient Gaelic, is the belief of Prof. Emil Menke-Gluckert of the Dresden Technical college.

Spongy Iron in Germany

Berlin.—Spongy iron that is soft and malleable like lead and employable for some of the same purposes has been developed here by a physicist, Dr. Hans Vogt, after many years of effort. The material has the further advantages that it is much lighter, lower in price, and can be produced from native ores.

Star Dust

★ Andrea Steps Along

★ Lone Ranger Craze

★ All-Age Shaggers

—By Virginia Vale—

ANDREA LEEDS has been stepping right along since she did so well in a minor role in "Stage Door." She went on to do well in "Goldwyn Folies," is working now in "Letter of Introduction," and will play opposite Joel McCrea in a picture called, so far, "Youth Takes a Fling."

Which all goes to show that she was right when she refused to go on as just one more contract player. She felt that she wasn't getting anywhere, you'll remember, and got out of her contract, and all Hollywood said she was crazy, as she had just one performance to her credit at that time.

And then—"Stage Door" and all the opportunity in the world!

The "Lone Ranger" craze is growing every day. The actor who plays the "Ranger" in the screen serial may go on a personal appearance tour. National Broadcasting company has arranged for transcription rights of the radio program for the South, Canada and Australia—at present it's heard on a 42-station tie-up three times a week. There's talk of a circus stunt and of a cartoon strip for the newspapers. And the country will be flooded with books, cowboy suits, chewing gum, sweaters, and all the other merchandise that can be used in profitable tie-ups.

Charlie Chaplin's latest discovery, Dorothy Cummingore, has been given a contract by Warner Brothers, and you'll see her first in "Three Girls on Broadway."

The picture business being a bit slow at the moment, picture stars are doing quite a lot of vacationing. Miriam Hopkins and her husband, Anatole Litvak, the director, are at her charming little house in New York. Fredric March expected to have to cut his New York vacation short, and then got word that he might stay on indefinitely. Madeleine Carroll and Wendy Barrie are among the toasts of New York.

Bing Crosby can continue with his present radio sponsors for ten years if he wants to. It's said the advertising agency connected would like him to sign an agreement for that length of time, with the usual year to year options. His present contract still has eight months to run. Of all the Hollywood folks who have gone on the air, Bing has been the most successful and shows no sign of diminishing popularity.

Bing Crosby

Benny Goodman recently gave his second concert in Boston, before a packed house; as in Carnegie Hall, in New York, the first thing anybody knew the younger set in the crowd was out in the aisles beginning to "shag." An usher hurried forward to stop them, whereupon a conservative looking, middle-aged gentleman stopped the usher. Seems he'd decided to learn the "shag" and thought that was as good a place as any to begin.

ODDS AND ENDS... Paul Muni seems to be all set to do "The Life of William Tell" ... When Frank Lloyd directs "If I Were King," with Ronald Colman, Frank's daughter, Alma, will play "Colette" ... Joe Penner's new picture, "Go Chase Yourself," is his best one yet ... Walt Disney divided $50,000 among the people who helped him to make "Snow White" ... Max Baer is coaching Robert Taylor for "Knock Out" ... The objection to Shirley Temple's making personal appearances has been that she was too young to appear behind the footlights ... But Mary Pickford began when she was five, and it didn't seem to hurt her any ... In "Four Men and a Prayer" you'll see Richard Greene, recently arrived from England, who, it is said, will be groomed for stardom ... Now it's announced that Maude Adams' movie tests were so successful that she will not appear in "The Young in Heart," but in a production giving more scope to her talents.

WHAT to EAT and WH

C. Houston Goudiss Describes the Place of Fats in the Diet

Nationally Known Food Authority Compares the Different Cooking Fats and Shortenings

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th St. New York City.

THERE are, perhaps, more false notions concerning fats than any other class of foods.

Some homemakers, considering them as "fattening" only, try to eliminate them entirely from the diet. Others have the impression that foods containing fat are difficult to digest, and for this reason deprive their families of many delicious and healthful foods. Both points of view arise from ignorance of dietary facts.

Fats Are Necessary to Health

Fats have a number of important functions to perform. They are a concentrated fuel food, having more than twice the energy value of an equal weight of protein or carbohydrate.

One-half ounce of fat, that is one tablespoon, yields 100 calories, and were he able to eat it, a man could obtain an entire day's fuel from three-fourths of a pound of fat. It is interesting to note that it would require nearly eight pounds of cooked rice to give the same number of calories.

In Oriental countries, where large populations live in great poverty, fat is usually scarce and it is necessary to consume huge quantities of food in order to meet the daily fuel requirements. As a result, most of the people develop distended abdomens.

Children Must Have Fat

Because fat is such a compact food, nutritionists agree that for growing boys and girls, and men engaged in strenuous physical exercise, fat is almost essential, if they are to get enough total calories.

There is also experimental evidence that at least a small amount of one or more of the unsaturated fatty acids must be supplied by the food if normal nutrition is to be maintained. And two competent investigators found, experimentally, that the presence of fat in the diet tends to conserve vitamin B in the body.

Some fats, especially those from animal sources, are rich in vitamins A and D, and fats made from vegetable oils may contain vitamin E.

Fat and Hunger

Perhaps the greatest service performed by fat is its ability to give "staying power" to the diet—to satisfy hunger. In this respect, it directly affects the disposition and may influence the ability to enjoy life.

The shortage of fats in European countries during the World war graphically demonstrated how a deficiency of this class of foods can destroy the morale of entire nations.

With supplies cut off or very greatly curtailed, the warring countries found it necessary to ration fats closely. As a result, their people were always hungry and dissatisfied, even when their actual needs were satisfied. In this connection, it is interesting to note that a slice of bread and butter or margarine will delay the onset of hunger longer than a slice of bread and jam, even though the number of calories may be the same.

Different Fats Compared

As sources of energy, the different food fats are very similar. Thus, the homemaker's choice may be determined by preference, convenience, economy, and the use to which the product is to be put.

The various forms of edible fats and oils are derived from both animal and vegetable sources. They include butter, margarine, lard, compounds, which are a mixture of animal fats and vegetable oils, hydrogenated fats, and the liquid vegetable oils.

Butter and margarine are used chiefly as a spread, and it is interesting to note that the annual per capita consumption of margarine is steadily increasing, as homemakers have discovered that the use of this less expensive product releases more money for milk, fruits and vegetables. Margarine is interchangeable with butter for dressing vegetables and in doughs containing spices, fruits and chocolate. Its shortening power and keeping qualities are similar to those of butter.

Lards, compounds and other shortening fats are useful not only as a means of increasing palatability and food value, but to add flakiness to baked foods and to produce a crisp coating which seals in the minerals and vitamins of fried foods.

Lard is used chiefly as a shortening for pastry, and a good grade will be found to be white and free from objectionable odors. The highest grade, called leaf lard, is produced from the leaves of fat in the sides of the hog.

When made by a reputable manufacturer, the compounds prepared especially for cake making, for shortening pastry and for deep-frying, are wholesome, highly nutritious and give most satisfactory results. They are a most economical form of shortening.

Digestibility of Fats

Because of their ability to retard digestion somewhat and thus give satiety value to a meal, the impression has grown up that fats are "difficult" to digest. This results from confusing the length of time required for digestion and the completeness with which a food is digested.

When "digestibility" is regarded in the popular sense of the ease, comfort and speed with which the digestive organs carry on their work, it is conceded that fats in general retard the secretion of the gastric juice and thus cause food to remain longer in the stomach.

On the other hand, most fats have such a high coefficient of digestibility, that under conditions only about one-tenth of the fat eaten escapes digestion. Experiments indicate, for example, that the coefficient of digestibility of oleomargarine is 97.55 per cent.

It is sometimes erroneously stated that pastry is indigestible. This statement is without foundation, provided the pastry is from a high grade shortening is properly baked. Similarly, foods come in for a great deal of criticism that should not be charged to the use of fat, but incorrect methods of cooking food is properly cooked in fat has a high smoking point, will be no opportunity for decomposition products to develop.

How Much Fat?

Nutritionists have ample evidence that health is best secured when 30 to 35 per cent of the energy value foods is provided in the form of fat. This will include the fat of meat and the fat in cooking the many delicious and baked foods which make eating a pleasure.

Strange Facts

Night Worker
Wilts at 90°

WHY do expensive gardenias wilt and drop their blossoms when grown in greenhouses? The common garden varieties, grown out of doors in warm climates, keep their blossoms fresh until picked. In mid-winter when they bring the highest prices the sweet scented white blossoms often fall from their stems before they can be shipped from the greenhouses. Cornell university's department of horticulture has just solved the mystery for the florists. Most plants do not grow during the night. Gardenias are night workers. Curtis Keyes discovered gardenias work in two shifts. Like other workers they gather food in daylight hours, but when night falls the glamorous gardenia begins to grow. Daylight is the signal for the shift back to the food-making process, when the plant gathers sunshine, moisture and carbon dioxide to make starch. Night temperatures in greenhouses must be reduced to 58 or 60 degrees for the hard-working gardenia. The usual high temperatures of 80 and 90 degrees cause the blossoms to wilt and drop from the stem.

In America and Europe the plant is grown only for its beautiful white flowers and for perfume. In China and Japan one species

Desired to Know Who Thrust Honor Upon Him

At a prominent watering place a large crowd gathered on the pier gazing out to the swirling waters. A man was struggling for his life, shouting for help.

Suddenly, amid the cheers of the spectators, a young man dived fully dressed into the sea and brought off a gallant rescue.

The rescuer received the congratulations of everybody who witnessed the deed, and the suggestion that the hero should be honored was received with cheers. "Oh, well," said the young man, "it's O. K. by me—but what I want to know is, who pushed me off the pier?"

Reformed Church Scene Of Beautiful Wedding Sat.

DOUBLE RING CEREMONY UNITES ETHEL BARZ AND EDMUND JOSTEN

Young Couple Will Make Home On Farm East Of Klemme

A beautiful wedding took place at the Klemme Reformed Church at high noon Saturday when Miss Ethel Barz became the bride of Mr. Edmund Josten. Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch, pastor of the church, officiated the double ring ceremony in the presence of these fine young people in the holy bonds of matrimony.

The church was beautifully decorated for the wedding with June flowers. The bride wore a beautiful white dress with a finger tip veil and carried a bouquet of yellow roses. She was attended by Miss Dorothy Miller, of Polver, Iowa. The groom wore the conventional dark blue and Mr. Milvern Barz, brother of the bride acted as the best man.

Miss Irene Becker, cousin of the groom, played several musical selections on the piano and a quartet composed of Ronald, Harley and Raymond Barz and Edwin Thiemann sang "Oh, Promise Me" and "I Love You Truly."

Harley and Maxine Barz were the ring bearers and Darlene Barz and Calvin Josten were the flower children. In the wedding ceremony the bride was given away by her father, Mr. Albert Barz.

Mrs. Josten, who is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Barz, is a graduate of the Klemme High School. She attended Iowa State Teachers College at Cedar Falls and for the past four years has been a very successful teacher in the rural schools of this community. Mr. Josten is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Josten. He also attended the Klemme Schools and since has devoted most of his time to farming. Mr. Josten is also an electrician and does a lot of wiring work.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Josten are products of this community, having been born and raised on farms near Klemme.

Hundred Forty Five At Dinner

Following the ceremony a wedding dinner was served at the Albert Barz home east of Klemme. The color scheme of yellow and green was carried out in the decorations. Yellow streamers at each table led to the place cards and at each place. A rose was also placed at each place.

At the bride's table, at which she was seated, a bouquet from the flower garden of the bride's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wille, was used as a centerpiece. Mr. and Mrs. Wille were both able to attend the ceremony and be present at the dinner.

Out of town guests present at the wedding and for the dinner included Rev. and Mrs. Gauger, of Buffalo Center; Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Palmbly, Gladys and Clarence, of Garden City, Minn.; Janet Davis, Vernon Center, Minn.; Mr. and Mrs. Harold Case and Irene, of Garden City, Minn.; Mr. and Mrs. Earl Josten, of Des Moines; Miss Dorothy Miller, of Polver; Mr. and Mrs. Emil Barz and Max, of Waterloo; Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Palmer, of Big Fork, Minn.; Mr. and Mrs. Olaf Eliason, Kanawha.

Guests From Garner

The following guests were from Garner and vicinity: Mr. and Mrs. Will Barz; Mr. and Mrs. August Haberkamp and family; Mr. and Mrs. Ray Haberkamp and family; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Haberkamp and family; Mr. and Mrs. Lee Hammond and family; and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Greimann. After a wedding trip to the Black Hills Mr. and Mrs. Josten will be at home to their friends on the farm east of Klemme.

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. I own a tract of land and I am renting one tract on shares. The landlord and I have made application to have these two tracts considered as one farm, and the county committee has approved it. The corn allotment on the two tracts is 100 acres. I am planting 50 acres on my own and 50 acres on the landlord's tract. My own farm is a very good one, and the corn yield will probably be placed at 50 bushels on it. The tract I am renting is very poor land, and the corn yield will probably be 30 bushels. Will I receive more payment per acre from my own farm than from the landlord's tract.

A. No. Since these two tracts have been combined, they will be considered as one farm and the corn yield will be averaged for the two tracts. That is, if each tract had a 50-acre corn allotment, the one with the 50-bushel yield, the other with 30, would mean that the corn yield for the farm as now constituted will be 40 bushels.

Q. I am farming my own farm and renting an 80-acre farm on shares. There is a 30-acre corn acreage allotment and 50 acres of total depleting. The crops which will be grown on this farm this year are 70 acres of alfalfa for hay and 10 acres of oats which will be seeded. I am paying two-fifths for the oats and one-half on the alfalfa hay as rent. There are no soil-building practices on this farm this year. Will my landlord receive any payments?

A. Yes. Since no corn is being planted on this farm, no corn payments will be made. Since there will be no corn allotment for payment, the payment will be made for the entire 50 acres of soil-depleting at the general depleting rate for the farm. The general soil-depleting payment will be made upon the entire 50-acre total depleting allotment, the landlord receiving two-fifths of the same. Since no soil building practices are being made upon this farm, there will be no conserving payment.

Q. I received my allotments and they are as follows: 100 acres total, 50 of which is my corn allotment, 50 acres for other depleting crops. I already had 60 acres of winter wheat sown on this farm. The county committee found it impossible to raise my allotment when I appealed to them so I will have 10 acres excess general depleting crops. Can I plow this wheat under to get into maximum performance?

A. No. In this respect wheat is different from other small grain crops. The Docket provides that, with the exception of orchards, wheat cannot be plowed under or pastured unless the pasturing is started before May 1 and then pastured heavily enough continuously to prevent grain formation or plowed before May 1 in preparation for another crop.

Q. I have received my wheat allotment and feel certain that I have much more wheat sown than my allotment will be for 1938. Will I have a deduction made from my payments if I find that I have exceeded my wheat allotment?

A. No. Wheat allotments for 1938 will be made only for the purpose of payment. In checking performance wheat will be considered only as a general crop such as oats or barley.

LAURA M. MONSON BECOMES BRIDE OF MARTIN K. ELSTAD

Miss Laura M. Monson of Decorah, became the bride of Martin K. Elstad of Prosper, Minn., at a ceremony performed at the home of the bride's sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Roy O. Berge, 107 Grove street, at 12:00 o'clock noon, Wednesday, June 8 by Dr. Carlo A. Sperati of Decorah. Only immediate relatives and friends were in attendance.

Mrs. Roy O. Berge was her sister's matron of honor. Harold E. Ellickson of Decorah, friend of the groom, was best man.

The decorations in the home were simple. The marriage took place before an altar used by the groom's parents under a canopy of white streamers draped to the double window and wall pockets containing yellow roses and yellow daisies and baby's breath. Ferns (dragon) were on the floor at each side of the altar.

The bride was charming in a fitted Pacawa redingote with coat of oyster shell and dress of luggage tan, white accessories, spectator pumps and purse with luggage tan trim. She wore a corsage of Talisman roses and yellow daisies.

The matron of honor wore a grey colored crepe-dress with du-colored bonnet and royal blue trim and white accessories. Her flowers were yellow roses and bachelor buttons.

A wedding dinner was served at Hotel Winneshiek following the ceremony, to the wedding guests. Immediately after the dinner the bride and groom departed on a short wedding trip to Minneapolis.

They will be at home to their friends after June 13 at Klemme, Iowa, where they will make their home for the summer months. Beginning September first they will make their home in Story City, Iowa, where the groom is to be director of public school music for the coming year.

The parents of both the bride and groom are deceased. The bride had lived with her aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Lee of Decorah, since childhood. For the past two years she has been playground director and dancing instructor at Hillcrest school, a private girls' school at Beaver Dam, Wis.

The out of town guests, who were in attendance at the wedding were Lieut. Ray M. Lee, of Minneapolis, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Elstad and family of Whalen, Minn., and P. H. Stensholt of Canton, Minn.—Decorah Public Opinion.

THREE LITTLE MAIDS

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

When the leaves were turning yellow in the autumn of 1908, three little maids in flowing silken gowns marched up the stairs of a weatherbeaten Victorian building in Macon, Georgia, and breathlessly confronted the registrar of Wesleyan college, oldest chartered woman's college in the world.

Temporarily taken aback, the registrar quickly regained his composure and flipped open the pages of a great ledger. In the great book, the three little maids inscribed, one after the other, these names:

"E-Ling Soong
"Ching-Ling Soong
"May-Ling Soong
"Father; Charles Jones Soong, Shanghai, China."

Then, armed with certificates of registration, the three little maids climbed more stairs, marched down a long corridor toward their rooms—and toward a place in history as one of the greatest trios of women in the chronicles of mankind.

Today, with China fighting for her very life as a free and independent democracy, the enrollment of the three Soong sisters at Wesleyan takes on many aspects of a turning point in history. For when the three little Chinese maids registered at an American college, the history of China began re-shaping itself to fit an American pattern.

It was a process which had been heading toward a climax for a full quarter-century.

In the 1830s the father of the three Soong girls, Charles Jones Soong, arrived in the United States as a poor relation, come to serve an apprenticeship with a wealthy uncle in Boston.

Fortunately for China, however, Charles Soong found a way out. Looking about for an American solution to his problem, he found it in the very best tradition of the Bay state. He ran away to sea, be-beginning as a cabin boy on a steamship plying the coastwise channels between Boston and Savannah, Ga.

In the sleepy, lush civilization of the American deep South, Charles Soong found something kindred to the slow but determined life of the agricultural China which had given him birth. Soon the little Oriental cabin boy took off his white jacket for the last time and enrolled as a student at Duke university.

Back to the Orient.

When Charles Soong returned to China as a publisher of Bibles, one of his first social projects was to found the Chinese Young Men's Christian association.

And as his three daughters and his son grew, Charles Soong resolved to bring them up in the American way which had so profoundly influenced his own life. In the care of a missionary returning to the United States, he sent his four children to college—the boy, T. V. Soong, to Harvard; the three girls to staunch old Methodist Wesleyan.

The three Soong sisters spoke many times of their hope that China might some day become a great republic like the United States. And in 1911, they saw the first of their dreams for China come true when China became a republic under the inspired leadership of one of history's great republicans, Dr. Sun Yat-sen.

The enthusiasm of the second Soong sister, Ching-Ling, at this event is still remembered at Wesleyan. Classmates say that when first news came of Sun Yat-sen's success, Ching-Ling climbed onto a chair to pull down the old Imperial Dragon from her wall and put in its place the flag of the new Republic of China. Throwing the old banner to the floor, she exclaimed:

"Sun Yat-sen has achieved one of the most glorious deeds in the history of the world."

She Was Right.

Her enthusiasm was almost prophetic, for just four years later little Ching-Ling became the bride of Sun Yat-sen and, as his wife, was able to aid him in his mission of infusing the democratic American spirit into China's 400,000,000 people.

The historic significance of the American education of the Soong sisters became even more profound when the eldest, E-Ling, married Dr. H. H. Kung, himself an American university graduate as well as a descendant of Confucius and today the premier of China.

When her sisters returned to China, May-Ling transferred to Wellesley college in Massachusetts, to be near her brother at Harvard.

That little May-Ling would ever become more famous than her two illustrious sisters seemed almost an impossibility.

But in 1927 at one of the innumerable gatherings at the Soong house, May-Ling met a slim, young leader of the Chinese Republicans, Chiang Kai-shek, who had just concluded a spectacular campaign to unite China solidly behind the principles of Sun Yat-sen.

Chiang Kai-shek fell in love with May-Ling. Their courtship was an impetuous and a strange one. For interspersed with love-making were interminable discussions of economics, of China's history, her future, of great reforms and great plans. During the courtship, May-Ling converted Chiang Kai-shek to Christianity. He quickly became one of the CAROLE LOMBARD and Clark Gable really ought to go into the dressmaking business. They co-operated on a sports jacket which Alice Marble, the United States' Number One woman tennis player, will wear when she steps out on the courts of Wimbledon, England, to battle for a championship.

Carole designed the jacket, (she's Alice Marble's best friend) and Clark had his tailor make it. It's a knockout. And Alice, tall, blonde and pretty, will wear it.

Remember "Dawn Patrol," in which Richard Barthelmess starred, and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., after pleading and fighting for the role, played the second lead so ably that he stole the picture and proved himself a good actor? Well, it's to be made again, with Errol Flynn, Patricia Knowles and Basil Rathbone in the leading roles.

Claudette Colbert, who recently got home from that European vacation, likes simple clothes—but listen to the description of the dress recently designed for her by Travis Banton, one of moviedom's ace designers. It's frilly, it's frothy; it's of white organza, covered with a printed pattern of cherries in black. The skirt is shirred and full, the neckline is outlined by a flounce, with wider flounces forming the sleeves. Sounds anything but simple!

Alice Brady has had years on the stage and years in the movies, but when you hear her on the radio you may be sure that she is nervous. The microphone simply scares her into such a state of nerves that the pages of her script have to be pasted on cardboard, to keep them from rattling.

Encouraged by its success in building Ginger Rogers up as a dramatic star, RKO is going to try to do the same thing with Ruby Keeler, the dancer who is Mrs. Al Jolson in private life. You'll see the first results of the new campaign in "Mother Carey's Chickens." With Fay Bainter and Ralph Morgan also in the cast, the girl will have to act or be utterly swamped.

Bob Ripley has discovered, in his search for "Believe It Or Not," that it is three and two-thirds times as easy for a man to become an amazing person as it is for a woman to do so. He finds that amazing women are just as interesting as men, but rarer. The only reason he can give is that they don't have as much chance to distinguish themselves as men do.

The first thing any of us know, someone is going to form an organization to protest against radio programs which are awfully amusing to the audience in the broadcasting studio, but pretty dull to those who just tune in, and can't see what is going on. Eddie Cantor is one of the worst offenders. After all, radio is supposed to be heard, not seen. And I know of more than one instance in which a listener, at home, swore never to buy the sponsor's product because it was so annoying to hear the laughter and not know what was funny.

Watch Your Kidneys!

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery.

Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

WHY TAXES GOING UP

More than two million checks a year will have to be written by Iowa state officials this year. Old age pensions take 600,000 checks; aid to the blind and dependent children 250,000; general state business, 400,000. You say "Well, that totals only 1,250,000." True enough, but the unemployment compensation benefits begin soon and the payment connected with that will require more than ONE MILLION additional checks. Old Mayan Customs and Costumes in Guatemala

One of the customs of Guatemala is the holding of frequent fiestas, when whole communities participate in some religious ceremony and then relax into merriment. One of these celebrations is the Fiesta de los Voladores, or fliers, which takes place each year in Chichicastenango, an Indian town in upland Guatemala.

This ceremony has been observed for thousands of years and represents the descent to the earth of the messengers of the Chacs, who are the Mayan gods. A ladder-like mast, made from tree trunks lashed together, is erected in front of the church in the town's plaza. Two fliers in costumes and masks climb to the top and seat themselves in the looped ends of two ropes which hang from a revolving frame. Swinging out from the mast, they descend in wide circles as the ropes unwind from the top until they reach the ground.

Market days also provide a colorful spectacle. Natives from many miles around bring in produce and handicraft to the cities on certain days each week. At Solola, above Lake Atitlan, the market is held on Fridays, and at Chichicastenango the market days when 5,000 natives assemble in their tribal costumes, are Thursdays and Sundays.

The men wear aprons and woolen breeches, curved and slit at the knee, with embroidered pocket flaps and boleros harking back to the Andalusian conquistadores. The members of one tribe will wear full, white trousers and aprons in contrasting color, those of the next will have costumes utterly different. The women all wear blouses called "huipiles" and skirts with contrasting sashes of brilliant pattern, yet each is quite distinctive and typical of the woman's village.

How Soldier Read Bible From His Playing Cards

The story of a soldier reading the Bible from a pack of playing cards follows:

A soldier is said to have gone to church without his Bible. He was observed toying with a deck of cards, and when arrested described each card to the magistrate by allusion to Biblical characters, explaining the cards served as a Bible as follows:

Ace, there is only one God; deuce, Father and Son; trey, Trinity; four, the Evangelists; five, the Wise Virgins; six, heaven and earth made in six days; seven, He rested on the seventh day; eight, the eight righteous persons saved during the flood; nine, the nine lepers cleansed by the Saviour; ten, the Commandments; king, God of Heaven, queen, Queen of Sheba who visited Solomon. "And what is the knave?" asked the magistrate. And the prisoner answered, "The greatest knave I know is the policeman who brought me here."

"He may not be the biggest knave," commented the magistrate, "but he is the biggest fool." "There are 52 cards," continued the soldier, "the number of weeks in the year; there are 12 picture cards, the number of months; four suits for the seasons; 13 cards to the suit, the number of weeks in the quarter; so you see the cards are alike a Bible and an almanac."

Dogs Travel on Ice

Arctic sled dogs pull sleds over all types of country. There are gravel and rock stretches swept absolutely clear of snow, ice caps and yawning descents. They pull heavy sleighs through the bush country, harnessed two by two on a main line, or across windswept sea ice in fan shape formation from the main trace connecting the heavy sleds. They travel barefoot, or moccasins shod over bare sea ice to protect their feet which would otherwise have the skin torn off by the extreme cold of the ice. They must even fight sand storms in the extreme north where the fiercest winds sweep island shores clear of snow and choke dogs and men with stinging sand. The Arctic sled dog has great endurance. Even though those dogs may not have been fed for days they can still travel far distances over ice and snow.

Changes in United States Capitol

In 1864 congress transformed the old house wing of the Capitol into Statuary hall. On December 2, 1863, a patriotic crowd assembled to witness the placing of Thomas Crawford's Statue of Freedom on the top of the dome. When the field battery fired the national salute at noon the Capitol was complete in its main lines. Subsequently minor renovations were made to permit the introduction of steam heating (1865); elevators (1874); fireproofing (1881); electric lighting (1882); modern drainage system (1893); and air conditioning (1937).

Westminster Abbey's Towers

The Westminster abbey's towers rest on the site of towers built by King Edward the Confessor, and parts of the latter exist underneath the present building. The abbey bells hang in the northwest tower, but in the Middle Ages the belfry was a massive detached building which stood on the site of the London Guildhall. It had walls of immense thickness, and above it rose a tall spire. It was demolished in the Eighteenth century.

AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY ELECTS NEW OFFICERS

The regular meeting of the Klemme unit was held at the home of Mrs. Albert Etchen with a large number of members present.

The unit voted to send $2.00 to Knoxville for the purpose of buying carnival prizes.

$5.00 was sent to the Department headquarters. This is to be used in child welfare work.

Report of the poppy chairman showed the sale of poppies was almost identical with other years.

After the regular business meeting election of officers was held and the following were elected:

Mrs. Albert Etchen, Pres.; Mrs. Helen Kirkwood, Vice Pres.; Mrs. Leafy Coobs, Sec. and Treas.; Mrs. Dave Schwichtenberg, Sergeant at Arms; and Mrs. Nellie Arnold, Chaplain.

The next regular meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Helen Kirkwood when the foregoing officers will be installed.

FARMERS UNION HELD MEETING TUESDAY EVENING JUNE 7

The Liberty local of the Farmers Union held their regular monthly meeting at Liberty No. 7 school, Tuesday evening, June 7.

Mr. D. D. Alderdyce, the speaker of the evening, went into the viciousness of the AAA and quoted the United States News as follows: "Farmers will be 'policed' from the air under the new program to check fulfillment of AAA crop control. Contracts for photographing 108,854 square miles by air have been let and an additional 300,000 to 400,000 square miles will be photographed in the same way if suitable bids can be obtained."

In referring to the monetary policy today, he said, "These bankers (referring to the Internationalists) know how to make like a grocer knows out sugar."

After a short program adjourned and served.

The Kigelia Pinnata is one of the most curious trees in America. It bears a large, inedible fruit, about 27 inches in length and 16 pounds in weight, and so closely resembling the liver sausage that it is known as the "sausage tree." It is native to the Victoria Falls region of Africa. The long stems bearing the fruit are nearly an inch in di-

Cool Weather Has Retarded Iowa Grasshopper Hatching

Cool weather has retarded hatching of grasshoppers and mortality of newly hatched 'hoppers due to rainy weather is slight, reports Dr.
Carl J Drake of Iowa State College.

Most damage from grasshoppers in southern Iowa has been in newly seeded alfalfa and clover where as many as 200 'hoppers per square yard have been found.

Serious chinch bug damage to crops is also reported, according to Dr. Drake. Chinch bugs are now in the egg-laying stage, but reports from Fremont County indicate that some rye and corn fields are seriously infested with adult bugs.

Hybrid Corn Method Might Produce Better Farm Animals

East Lansing, Mich.—Breeding methods that have greatly improved the per-acre yield of corn will presently be applied to farm animals with equally beneficial results, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace prophesied here in the Spragg Memorial lecture, delivered at Michigan State college.

Secretary Wallace himself pioneered the large-scale application of Mendelian genetical principles to corn breeding, in a day when corn judging was based solely on the production of big, handsome individual ears, regardless of yield per acre. Though he was only a young man, he persisted—in the face of skepticism on the part of his seniors—in producing inbred strains of corn genetically pure for the particular high-yielding qualities he desired, and then crossing them with other pure lines.

This obtained the double advantage of combining the specifically desired qualities and at the same time endowing the offspring with the biological quality, still not well understood, known as hybrid vigor.

Applied to Animals.

Breeding of farm animals, such as dairy cattle, egg-laying chickens, and meat animals lags far behind corn breeding, Secretary Wallace declared. Selecting breeding stock on the basis of show-ring "points" is on a level with the old-fashioned methods of corn judging by individual ears. Performance tests based on egg-laying and butterfat-production records are somewhat better, but are still far short of certainty in selection and transmission of desirable qualities to offspring.

What is really needed, the speaker hammered home, is the selection of particular desirable qualities, the fixing of these in pure lines of sires and dams, and the uniting of these pure lines into high-production offspring by crossing. It will be the hybrid corn technique applied to animals.

Carrying of this pure-line method of breeding into application in human eugenics did not appeal to Secretary Wallace as practicable. Negative eugenics, the attempted elimination of undesirable traits by sterilization programs, he considers of dubious workability. Similar techniques failed when applied in early corn breeding, he pointed out.

Antarctic Continent Was Discovered by American

Philadelphia.—The Antarctic continent, once considered worthless but now the subject of international competition of claims and counter-claims, was first sighted by an American boy hardly out of his teens, in command of a tiny boat that would hardly be considered safe on a landlocked lake. This occurred on November 18, 1820, and the discoverer was Capt. Nathaniel B. Palmer, in the 47-foot sloop Hero of 45 tons register.

At the meeting of the American Philosophical society here Prof. William H. Hobbs of the University of Michigan told of discovering an old map in the collection of Yale university that definitely proves the claim of American priority in discovery in the Antarctic ocean, as against the contention that a British commander was the discoverer of Antarctica. Entries in the Hero's logbook, now in the Library of Congress, confirm the data given by the map.

It was not until 1832, 12 years after Palmer's discovery, that the coast was sighted by the British expedition which gave it the name by which it is still called on present-day maps, Graham Land.

Camels Formerly Roamed Plains of North America

Washington.—Camels and camel-like animals that once roamed the West when it was really wild and woolly were described to the National Academy of Sciences by Prof. William Berryman Scott of Princeton university.

Camels actually originated in North America. Some of them migrated to Asia, others to South America where their descendants still survive as the llamas and alpacas. But in old days the camel population of North America was far richer and more varied than the present depleted assortment in the southern continent.

The last one was a creature now called Camelops, whose bones are found in the La Brea tar pits near Los Angeles. This animal may have survived until a human population had become well established on this continent.

Feats of "Telepathy" Explained by Highly Trained Perception

London.—Science has probed the apparent telepathic powers of a well-known vaudeville performer, Marion, and found that there is nothing occult or super-natural about them. Neither are they due to extra-sensory perception.

Instead, they are due to supernormal development of the ordinary power of perception. A preliminary report of the investigation by S. G. Soal has been made public by the University of London Council for Psychical Investigation.

Marion, whose real name is Josef Kraus, had two especially significant accomplishments. One was the finding of a hidden object. There was absolutely no trickery to this, Mr. Soal reports, and it was done without any physical contact with anyone in the room.

It was due, Mr. Soal found, to Marion's unusually sharp observation of the footsteps of a person walking behind him who knew where the object was. If all the audience was seated, Marion's ability to find the hidden object depended on his keen perception of involuntary head movements and changes of facial expression.

How He Recognized Cards.

The other unusual accomplishment of this performer was his ability to recognize any card he held in his hand. His skill at this was unknown to Marion himself until Mr. Soal tried it. Marion thought it was due to clairvoyance but after Mr. Soal's experiments it could be accounted for on the ground that Marion's acuteness of touch and his general alertness to sense stimuli are exceptional.

These findings do more than merely dispose of some claims to the power of clairvoyance and telepathy, comments the editor of the English medical journal, the Lancet. They show how highly perception may be developed.

The supernormally keen perceptive powers of Marion are of the order of those possessed by the great physicians of earlier days, the medical editor suggests. These men who practiced before the development of X-rays and laboratory tests had to rely almost entirely on their senses and their keen powers of perception in order to diagnose a case and foretell its probable outcome.

Gorillas and Hyenas Are Sufferers From Arthritis

Philadelphia.—Grandpa Gorilla has his bad days with "rheumatiz," no less than his human nth-degree cousins. Hyenas have it, too—presumably they don't laugh then. It seems to be the same kind of rheumatism—arthritis—most common and most painful in human beings.

Occurrence of arthritis in wild animals was described by Prof. Herbert Fox of the University of Pennsylvania to the American Philosophical society.

Professor Fox, as pathologist to the Philadelphia Zoological society, has had ample opportunity to diagnose the disease in many living animals. He has also examined skeletons in several museums. Total number of animals examined was 1,749, of which 77 proved to be definitely arthritic.

Occurrence of the malady among animals appears to be as little governed by rules as it is among suffering humans. It is not correlated with climate, location, food, focal infections, or kind of animal. It was most easily detected as an affliction of the spine, but was also found in other parts of the skeleton.

Animal families afflicted with arthritis include cat, cow, deer, bear, hyena, baboons and the anthropoid apes. It was not found among certain carnivora, notably the dog group; rodents and bats seem likewise to be immune.

Bends in Rails Caused by High Speed of Trains

Chicago.—Higher railroad train speeds, particularly of freight trains, are causing extensive damage to railroad tracks, A. A. Miller, maintenance of way engineer for the Missouri Pacific railroad told the Western Railway club here.

Irregular kinks and bends in the track, with consequent rough riding for passengers or sufficient damage as to necessitate renewal of track, have occurred to an increased extent during recent years as a result of the greater strain imposed on the track by more rapidly-moving locomotives and cars, he declared on the basis of reports from railroads throughout the country. Principal blame for the damage, he indicated, rests on the locomotives.

Copper Pays the Freight

Copper Cliff, Ont.—"Copper pays the freight and all the gold is gravy" is more than a miner's catch phrase here, where recovery of gold, silver, platinum, palladium, tellurium and selenium during the necessary refining of copper not only has increased the value of the finished product, copper, but brings added income from the sale of the by-product rare metals.

Ulysses Made Great Hero in Homer's Saga

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

WE FORGET 70 per cent of all we have ever learned—so the scientists say. But fortunately, we never entirely forget anything. The path is still in the brain, though not plain enough for use. No doubt you remember Ulysses as a former acquaintance, but perhaps his story as told by the immortal Homer, is vague.

When Paris stole Helen of Troy from Greece, all the kings of Greece were held to their oaths to fight in her behalf.

Ulysses, noted for his wisdom, refused to go into such a war. His life was happy with Penelope, his beautiful wife, so he feigned madness and went about the countryside sowing seeds that had been cooked. The councilmen of Greece suspected cunning so they placed the young son of Ulysses in the path of his plow.

When the "madman" reached the child he turned the plow aside, thus disclosing his sanity.

The ten years of siege at the walled city of Troy were tedious to Ulysses, who ever longed for Penelope and who feared for her safety after his long absence. In olden days a beautiful woman was none too safe without a husband to protect her. Glad was he indeed, when Troy fell into the hands of the Greeks after the trick of the wooden horse. With light heart he sailed away.

But ill winds beset him and Ulysses wandered over the whole sea, suffering disappointments and nar-

"GREATEST UNKNOWN"

Seven cities claim to be the birthplace of the Greek poet Homer. There is no accurate source for any definite information about the life of this man, yet he composed two of the greatest epics in all the centuries of mankind.

We do know that he lived sometime between the Sixth and Twelfth centuries before Christ was born, and we know that in old age Homer was blind. He made his living wandering from city to city entertaining the people with the stories of the Trojan war and of the wanderings of Ulysses. His "Iliad" and "Odyssey" are known round the world.

rowly escaping death on many occasions. It was even necessary for him to make a trip into Hades, land of departed souls.

Once he and his men found themselves on the island ruled by the one-eyed giants known as Cyclops. They hid in a cave which they discovered to be the home of a giant, who gleefully shut them in his cave and killed two men each day for his dinner. While he slept one afternoon, Ulysses heated a staff and put out the eye of the giant, hoping then to escape. But the passage-way was narrow and the giant carefully felt each animal as he let his sheep out to pasture.

With cunning, the Greeks killed all the sheep and skinned them. In the morning they walked out, holding the skins over them.

Other adventures beset the men. There was the island of the Sirens, the lovely women who sang divinely, luring men to their island where the men were then powerless. By stuffing cloth and wax into the ears of his men and having himself lashed securely to the mast, Ulysses passed the Sirens, being the first man to hear them and to escape their charm. Another adventure was the island where an enchantress turned men into animals, but Ulysses gained power over her and freed all the men whom she held.

Penelope's Troubles.

After wandering long and far, Ulysses reached Greece. He had heard of the suitors who had fastened themselves to the household of Penelope on the assumption that her husband had long been dead. They had stolen her substance until she had much ado to protect her husband's home. To evade them she had said that as soon as she completed the web which she was weaving, she would choose a husband. Each day she wove, and each night she unravelled, but now they had discovered her trickery and had forced her to set a date for choosing a husband from among them.

Disguised as a beggar, Ulysses went to the back of his home. The only living thing that recognized him was his dog and it died of joy. His old servant, now a swineherd, recognized a scar on Ulysses, and rejoicing and sorrowing together, told his master of the situation in his home. He praised Penelope's skill in handling the lecherous men. Ulysses sent for his son, now a man, and they two planned revenge.

As a beggar Ulysses went to the banquet. While the revelry was high, he removed the weapons from the hall, leaving the suitors without arms. The time came, and with his son, Ulysses killed the suitors.

Rag Rug Crocheted in Squares.

THE diagram shows how the contrasting squares are arranged to give the rug its interesting design. Whatever color scheme you use, black will be most effective for joining the squares and for an edging of single crochet around the outside of the rug. If the materials you have are not the colors you want, don't forget there is always the dye pot. Producing your own colors may be the most exciting part of rug making.

A crocheted rag rug like the one shown here uses odds and ends. Wool rags make a nicer rug than cotton, or rug yarn may be substituted if desired. Either a wood or large steel crochet hook is used. The rug shown here measures 36 by 21 inches. The 5-inch squares are made separately in single crochet stitch and then joined with crochet slip-stitch. If rags are used, tear or cut the strips not more than 1 1/4 inches wide, and work with the raw edges turned in as shown here at A. Measure each square carefully so they will all be exactly the same size. Full instructions for slip covers for side chairs like the one shown are in the book offered below.

To Stiffen Meringue.—A generous pinch of soda added to the egg whites before they are beaten will make meringue stand up better.

Pressing Pleated Skirt.—Wire paper clips may be used very successfully to hold pleats in position when pressing a skirt.

Firm Pie Crust.—To prevent the lower crust of a fruit pie becoming soggy, brush it over with the white of an egg before putting in the fruit filling.

When Tying Bundles.—Twine used in tying bundles should always be dampened. It will tie much tighter and will not slip when knots are made.

Protecting Hat Band.—A strip of cellophane, folded and placed under the inside hat band, will prevent perspiration and oil from staining the outside ribbon or band.

Strange Facts

Tiny Sailfish Puzzles Beebe

DR WILLIAM BEEBE returned recently from a tropical expedition. He had collected 20 different specimens of marine life. He brought back a fish not as long as his little finger. This was his most valuable specimen, a sailfish 1 1/2 inches long.

The familiar sailfish caught by anglers in California or Florida weighs from 30 to more than 100 pounds. Their length measures the height of a man or a giant. Some are even ten feet long. The "baby" sailfish measuring 1 1/2 inches may not be a "baby" at all. The tiny fish exactly like the ten-foot sailfish puzzles Doctor Beebe. In an interview on landing the well known scientist says the tiny sailfish might be the first young sailfish ever captured, or may be a new miniature species. There is much doubt of the 1 1/2 inch sailfish being the young of the ordinary sailfish because the little fish seems fully formed.

The sailfish derives its name from the huge dorsal fin that extends a foot or two above the body and resembles a sail. These fish feed on the surface of the water and they are caught by trolling in the daytime. The miniature sailfish secured by Doctor Beebe was caught at night under searchlights, on a voyage that took Doctor Beebe and his companion 2,000 miles down the west coast from Cape Lucas to Panama.

Wisconsin by Arthur Wellemeyer

To look at Northern Wisconsin, one wonders how any one could make a living in that awful looking country. Half of the land is covered with scrub trees and brush, there are many ponds and there one sees too many nigger heads in one field. There are mosquitoes and wood ticks in the summer, and plenty of snow and 40 below in the winter.

After Mrs. W. and myself spent several days visiting our daughter, Clarice, and her husband James Carlson, who live 300 miles north-east of Klemme in north central Wisconsin, I have noticed many good things about this seemingly wild country.

The soil is good, clay subsoil covered with about a foot of sandy loam.

The land is cheap—get a quarter section for a few hundred dollars, and taxes are low.

Farmers cut off the small trees, and hire a man with a "Cat" tractor to pull a huge single bottom breaking plow, 24 inches wide, which plows up stumps and all.

The progressive young farmers clean up and break ten or more acres every year and thus year after year their farm is enlarged.

Small grain, clover and grass grows abundantly and 90-day corn ripened last year. Silos are used for storing corn.

The farmer makes his money milking cows; the roads are graded and graveled, even if you don't see many fences, and the gather milk and cream to creameries and cheese factories. One factory gathers milk every day, after each milking. This is pasteurized and shipped to York City in refrigerated one carload every day. During winter they paid up to 57 cents pound of butterfat for best milk.

Canning factories pay good money for peas, beans, etc. In Wisconsin vegetables are grown because of their special flavor.

Lumber is cheap for homes and barns. Take your logs to the saw mill and get them for lumber at around $1.00 per 1,000.

Fuel is no item of expense every family has plenty of wood burn.

If you must have some beautiful to satisfy your step out on your front porch watch the deer jump over fence and eat out of your garden or roam into the woods and the bears roll over the rolled to find grubs, which they eat with breath deep of the fragrant laden with incense from the trees and cedar, and at night lulled to sleep by a chorus of Big ones live in every pond.

Yes, yes! The right men plenty of money in Northern Wisconsin, and the wrong men to death—even in Iowa.

Modern Fire Truck Assured For Klemme

KLEMME FIRE COMPANY TO GET MODERN EQUIPMENT
Members In Territory Subscribed To Receive Truck Service

A modern, up-to-date fire truck will soon be purchased by the Klemme Fire Department, who have been working for some time to raise funds with which to purchase this much needed equipment.

The Company has just completed a canvas of the farms in the Klemme territory and practically every farmer in the area extending six miles east, seven miles west, three miles north and three miles south from Klemme have subscribed to a fund to help purchase the new equipment.

$20 memberships were solicited from the farmers and this will enable them to receive fire truck service at any time and as often as required.

The town council is cooperating with the local fire department in purchasing the equipment and with that the company has in their own treasury, Klemme is assured of having as fine a piece of fire fighting equipment as will be found in north Iowa.

The equipment that will probably be purchased will be a truck completely mounted with both chemical tanks and high pressure pumps. The new truck will carry all the needed equipment for fighting fires in the country or in town, as the case may require.

Much credit for the success of the rural canvas is due Carl Anderson, George Lawhorn, Herman Paul and Roy Smock, who worked on this special rural membership committee.

The plan to be used here is similar to the one used at Belmond. Farmers who are members are to receive service without further charge. Non-subscribing farmers will be put in a call for the truck will be required to pay for the service.

The entire Klemme fire department is to be congratulated on their project. A new truck has been needed here for many years as the old equipment is obsolete and of little use when it comes to fighting any great blaze.

HELD REUNION SUNDAY

The Senior Class of Klemme High School, held their third annual class reunion and picnic Sunday at State Park in Clear Lake. All but one of the members were present and a good time was had by all.

This class was the originator of the reunion idea, and the two classes following have both taken up the idea.

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. Why were marketing quotas put into the Farm Act?

A. The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 provides for the Ever-Normal Granary, and this will result in increased supplies of food and fiber. The act also provides for loans. The quotas are designed to prevent market gluts, to protect farm prices in years of excessive supplies and make it possible to continue government loans. They can go into effect only with a two-thirds favorable vote of the farmers voting.

Q. Why should the AAA reduce production when there are people in this country who need food and clothing?

A. The limiting factor, economists say, in providing food and clothing for people is not the supply of farm products but is virtually always consumer income. Big supplies of farm products and low prices do not mean food and clothing for those who need them. On the contrary, low farm prices ordinarily accompany periods of wide-spread unemployment. Continued over-production in such times does not necessarily help the needy. It further reduces the purchasing power of farmers, and their inability to buy increases unemployment in the cities. These statements are illustrated by the experience of 1932, when there was excessive farm production.

Q. What is the ever-normal granary and how does the farm program propose to make use of it?

A. The drouths of 1934 and 1935 which reduced the crops of corn in those years by more than a billion bushels and cut the yields of other crops similarly, dramatized the need for extra reserves of food and feed to protect both consumers and producers. The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 provides the authority for storage of an additional reserve of about 100,000,000 bushels of wheat and 175,000,000 bushels of corn. In years of heavy production, the provision for additional reserves gives a place for some of the surplus and will provide a stabilizing influence on the market.

Q. Why does the AAA take good land out of production when much poorer land is left in cultivation?

A. In the first place, the necessary adjustment in supplies during periods of excessive surpluses could not be made if only so-called poor land were shifted to soil-conserving crops and uses. In the second place, we can not expect farmers on comparatively poor land to take all their land out of cultivation. The sacrifice would be too great. Furthermore, if all the poor land were taken out of intensive land cultivation and the good land planted regularly to soil-depleting crops, the good land soon would be poor land.

Q. What is parity price?

A. The price at which a commodity must sell in order to have the purchasing power for non-farm goods it had in a representative period in the past. This price is one when the price for the commodity was a fair one in comparison with the prices of things farmers have to buy. The parity period for most farm commodities is the 1909-1914 period.

TOO MUCH OF IT ALREADY!

is the 1909-1914 period.

Q. What does parity income mean?

A. Parity income for agriculture is a farm income which farmers must receive from farm products in order to have purchasing power equal to that of a representative period in the past—a period when agriculture received its fair share of the nation's income. The years 1909-1914 are taken as a representative period.

FORMER COUNTY RECORDER DEAD

Last Rites Conducted For Mrs. Hattie Aldrich At Britt

Funeral services for Mrs. Hattie M. Aldrich, former Hancock county recorder for two terms from 1918 to 1922, were held Saturday afternoon at the Wigton-Russ funeral home at Britt in charge of the Rev. C. N. McMillan, pastor of the Methodist church there and attended by a large group of friends from over the country.

Mrs. Aldrich spent her early married life in Garner. Her husband, the late Wesley Aldrich was clerk of court and later in the abstract office here, later moving to Britt where he was a practicing attorney for many years.

Interment was in Evergreen cemetery at Britt.

Keeping Up With Science

"Miniature States" Reveal Vital Facts About Governments

Madison, Wis.—Perhaps nowhere but in America could this happen.

Miniature governments—autocratic, democratic and anarchistic—have been built, using school children as the citizens, to find out experimentally just what effect government has on the individual.

An autocratic, dictatorial government breeds hostility, it is clearly shown by this experiment, reported to the Midwestern Psychological Association by Dr. Kurt Lewin, of the Iowa child welfare research station of the University of Iowa. The amount of hostility expressed by members of the autocratic group is 30 times as high as that among the citizens of the democracy.

Citizens in an autocracy cannot work together. Even when cooperative work groups were set up by the "dictator," they soon would break down. In the democracy, cooperation developed spontaneously.

More individual desire to dominate is evident in the autocracy, more feeling of "I-ness," more personal feeling.

Constructiveness is higher in the democracy; in the autocracy it falls down quickly when the "dictator" is not present.

They Find a Scapegoat.

In the autocracy, the hostility of the group is likely to center on a scapegoat who is treated so badly by the whole group ganged together that he finally becomes a "refugee" from the group. After his departure, another member becomes the scapegoat.

Contrary to what might be guessed, an anarchy was found to be nearer to the autocracy than to the democracy in effect on the citizens. The resemblance was particularly great in regard to the hostility between members.

"In autocracy the tension seems to be due to lack of freedom," Dr. Lewin interpreted. "In laissez faire, tension seems to be due to the anarchic structure of the situation which prevents long range planning and lacks meaningful time perspective both for the group and the individual."

Ether Drift Experiment Repeated With Success

Washington.—The ether drift experiment, whose failure more than 40 years ago started Einstein on the investigations that led to the relativity theory, has at last been repeated in modified form with successful results, which were reported here before the meeting of the National Academy of Sciences by Dr. Herbert E. Ives of the Bell Telephone Laboratories.

Secret of Dr. Ives' success was his use of streams of positively charged particles or ions, known as canal rays, instead of the beams of light originally tried in the classic Michelson-Morley experiment in 1887. This experiment undertook to find out to what extent light would be deflected from its straight path through the ether when it was made to take a course at right angles to the direction of the earth's motion through space. Light treated in this way might be considered scientifically as a clock, and the expectation was that a clock in motion should run slower than one at rest.

So slight is the slowing-down that no speeds available to experimenters when the theory was announced were adequate for a crucial test. But by using as a "clock" the light-giving oscillation of a hydrogen ion, which can be shot down a vacuum tube at a thousand miles a second, it is possible to measure a definite change in the color of the light. That, of course means a change in the rate of vibration of the atom.

Evolution "Caught in Act" by Study of Tree Snail

Washington.—Evolution has been "caught in the act" by Dr. Paul Bartsch, curator of mollusks at the United States National Museum, in a newly completed study of a strikingly beautiful species of tree snail from the Philippines.

First collected and described a hundred years ago, this snail species has been redescribed again and again under new names, because mutational variations have gone on so rapidly that each subsequent collector thought he had found something new. However, with a really large and complete collection before him, Doctor Bartsch was able to demonstrate that the whole varied life-complex is really one species. The snail is known to zoologists as Cochlostyla virgata.

Fire Protection Made Much Cheaper by a Flameproofing Acid

By ROBERT D. POTTER

Dallas, Texas.—Increased low-cost fire protection for America's homes should soon be possible through advances in chemical engineering revealed at the meeting of the American Chemical Society here.

Chemistry, by a new process, is now able to make cheaply and in vast quantities an acid from which can be made a unique flameproofing chemical. The chemical, known as ammonium sulfamate, does not change the appearance or feel of fabrics or paper impregnated with it. Moreover, it is not affected by dry cleaning methods so that it will safeguard draperies, upholstery and other household furnishings during their lifetime.

Parent raw material of the flameproofing chemical is sulfamic acid which, while known for more than 100 years, has previously been made only by costly laboratory processes. Thus its flameproofing ammonium salt was too high-priced to be readily available to most people.

A method for the large scale production of sulfamic acid has now been devised and put into operation, Martin E. Cupery, chemical engineer of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., declared in his report to the chemists.

Developed Here and in Germany.

Sulfamic acid is made from urea and fuming sulphuric acid by the new process which, by one of the coincidences of science, has almost simultaneously appeared in Germany and in the United States independently.

The new large-scale commercial method of making sulfamic acid, said Mr. Cupery, has made available for many uses a new industrial raw material. As prepared, it is a colorless, crystalline substance looking something like the naphthalene of moth balls but without the odor, for sulfamic acid is odorless.

A particularly useful property of sulfamic acid, Mr. Cupery asserted, is its inability to take up water. Because it is non-hygroscopic this very strong acid can easily be shipped and stored without danger of wetting.

However, the salts of sulfamic acid, of which the flameproofing chemical is only one, are soluble in water with one exception. Immersion, in fact, is the way the flameproofing chemical is applied to fabrics or paper. For this reason the materials flameproofed cannot be washed without destroying the fire-combating effects.

Animal Inventions Shown in a Vienna Museum

Vienna.—Inventions by insects, birds, and other animals, that anticipated by millions of years some of the devices of man himself are shown in a special collection at the Vienna Museum of Natural History. The exhibit makes available for public inspection a large number of examples of animal workmanship from all corners of the world, that ordinarily one sees only as pictures in books—if even there.

Prominent are specimens of houses as built by wasps, termites, and other social insects. One of these, a wasp nest from Brazil, is cut open to show how the insects move from floor to floor on a perfectly fashioned spiral ramp. Air-conditioning systems, powered with the insects' own wings, feature a number of types of insect architecture.

Other arts and crafts include weaving, basketry, netmaking, paper-making, and double walls for heat insulation.

Old Stone Age Implements Found in New Mexico

Cambridge, Mass.—Possibility that ancient America had an "Old Stone Age" is raised again with the discovery in New Mexico of crude stone axes strangely resembling handiwork of Europe's primitive Old Stone Age men.

That the unknown Americans, who made the crude implements, were not necessarily as ancient as Europeans of similar culture is plainly stated by Dr. Kirk Bryan of Harvard University, who found a number of tools in an old quarry in Rio Arriba county.

Discussing significance of the prehistoric tools, in Science, Doctor Bryan also says that no direct relationship with European types is implied. The tools do, however, represent a heretofore unrecognized type of ancient inhabitant of this continent, possibly preceding known Indian tribes.

Stops Bleeding

Munich.—A new German preparation, derived by chemists from the spinal fluid of animals, is reported here to be effective in staunching minor hemorrhages. "Manetol," injected intramuscularly after first being dissolved in water, stops bleeding of wounds in which the tissue is so injured that blood oozes in a number of places and is difficult to stop by any other means.

- ★ Synthetic Cobwebs
- ★ Radio Build-Ups

By Virginia Vale

WHEN Irene Dunne was in New York recently she had what might have been an embarrassing experience. She lunched alone in a smart restaurant, and when it came time to pay the check she discovered, to her horror, that she hadn't enough money.

She appealed to the manager, asking him if he would cash a check for the amount. He assured her that he would. So she wrote the check—and he promptly framed it. Just one more case where a well known face was worth a fortune!

Kay Francis is looking forward to September, when her current motion picture contract expires. She is going off for a long vacation in Europe. And nobody can blame her for wanting to be rid of the movies for a while, at least. Bad pictures have affected her box-office value, but when she fought for roles that she knew would be good, she didn't get them. Now that theatrical producers go to Hollywood when they want to cast new plays, it may be that she will return to the stage when that vacation is over.

KAY FRANCIS

Here's an odd note on the old stage-screen battle. "Stage Door" was a very successful play. The movies bought it and made it over—threw away the story and started from scratch. Now some of the summer stock companies would like to do the stage version, but one of the authors, Edna Ferber, won't release it to them—because she feels that the film version was so much better than the original!

Next time you see a cobweb on the screen think of the man who is Hollywood's expert cobweb-maker, Jess Wolf. His most recent assignment was constructing more than two miles of cobwebs for a castle in Warner Brothers' "Kidnaped." He has a gadget that squirts a rubber compound in a tiny thread. Then he weaves the threads into a cobweb pattern, and sprays them with gray paint.

Kay Kyser with his College of Musical Knowledge has a grand program with a really new idea. Kyser's from the Middle West, where a great deal of the talent seems to come from these days. Remember him on Wednesday nights.

W. C. Fields, who's out of movies for the time being, may return to the radio program which he deserted months ago. He left then because of a disagreement over scripts. The same reason was given for his movie contract's being terminated. Meanwhile Charlie McCarthy has become so popular on that radio program that one can't help wondering if there is a place for Fields.

It's becoming more and more evident that radio programs coming from cities and stations outside New York are better than a lot of those broadcast from the big city. One reason is that fast-talking agents can sell talent that isn't really very good. Questioned not long ago about the success of a certain singer her agent broke down and confessed all—told about how she had been built up, pushed ahead; how he landed this contract and then that one for her. Now she's one of radio celebrities, drawing a huge salary for her work on a well-known program. And a lot of girls who sing on local broadcasts made in smaller stations are ever so much better.

ODDS AND ENDS—Phil Baker has another daughter; that makes two daughters and two sons. Claudette Colbert spent just an hour in New York after arriving from Europe and before leaving for Hollywood. Irene Rich's radio sponsor has agreed to let her play Deanna Durbin's mother in "That Certain Age" on the screen. Louise Rainer didn't want to play a leading role in "The Great Waltz" until the company showed her Francis Gañ's tests in the part—which was a little hard on Francis!

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for June 26

SHARING SERVICE WITH THE LIVING CHRIST

LESSON TEXT—Mark 16:1-8, 14-16, 19, 20. GOLDEN TEXT—And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them. Mark 16:20. PRIMARY TOPIC—At Work With Jesus. JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Our Living Lord. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making a New World With Christ. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Making a New World With Christ.

Easter again? No, the calendar does not say so, nor have we forgotten that we observed Easter ten weeks ago, but quite properly we study the resurrection story again today. Not only does it come in the sequence of our lessons as our final study in the Gospel of Mark, but the fact is that every Sunday is a reminder of Easter. The reason why we worship on the first day of the week is that it is the resurrection day. What life it would put into our Sunday worship if the glory of the risen Lord would shine forth (as it should) each Lord's Day in all of our service and worship.

It is difficult to think or write about the living Christ without using superlatives. Our lesson for today brings before us the most important truth that the world has ever heard—"He is risen"; it speaks of the worst thing in the world—"unbelief"; and it presents the world's greatest commission—"Go . . . and preach."

I. The Transcendent Truth (vv. 1-8).

"Ye seek Jesus, the Nazarene, who hath been crucified; He is risen, He is not here" (v. 6).

The world anxiously awaits news, and, hoping almost against hope, it longs for good news. This is the good news—the Gospel—the all-important tidings that the Son of God who had taken upon Himself not only the form of man, but the sins of mankind as well, who had tasted the bitter death of Calvary's cross, could not be holden of death, but breaking its bands asunder had risen from the dead.

This truth becomes the chief burden of the messages of the disciples as they soon went everywhere proclaiming the Gospel. See the sermons recorded in the Book of Acts (2:24, 32; 3:14, 15; 4:10, 23; 10:40; 13:30). It was such preaching that was at the foundation of the Christian church. It may be that we should emphasize it more.

II. The Impassable Barrier (v. 14).

"He upbraided them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not." Many are the sins that men commit, but at the root of them all we find the heart of all sin—unbelief.

The tragic consequence of unbelief is that it shuts the door, throws up a barrier to God's blessing that is virtually impassable until God himself gives grace to believe. The astonishing thing is that the hardness of heart and lack of faith here were on the part of those who had been the disciples of Jesus, to whom He had made known the fact that He was to die and to arise on the third day, and to whom there had now come the word of eye-witnesses that they had seen the Lord.

While we marvel at their short-sighted unbelief, shall we not ask ourselves what hindrances we have placed in God's way in our own lives?

III. The Supreme Commission (vv. 15, 16, 19, 20).

"Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation" (v. 15). "And they went . . . and preached, the Lord working with them and confirming the word" (v. 20).

The great commission of Christ is still the "marching orders of the church," but how slowly we have marched. The writer of these notes was recently startled by statistics revealing anew the fact that "Christian" America is rapidly returning to the status of a mission field. It is said that last year 60,000 churches in America had no converts, and 9,000 churches were closed during the year. There are 10,000 villages reported to be without church services, and 30,000 communities without a resident pastor.

The command of Christ is that we should go to these pagan communities in our own land with the gospel, and surely it is our double shame that there are still lands where Christ has never been preached, yes, tribes that do not even have a word in their language for the blessed name—Jesus!

If we will go He will indeed work with us (v. 20) and accompany the message and ministry with divine authority and power. Who will go?

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them Nature designed the kidneys a marvelous job. Their task is to filter the flowing blood stream free of toxic impurities. The act of filtering itself is constantly producing matter the kidneys must remove from the blood. If good health is to be maintained, the kidneys must be kept in good working order. When the kidneys fail to do their duty, there is a waste that may cause body-aches, pains. One may suffer nagging, persistent headache, attacks of getting up nights, swelling, under the eyes—feel tired, worn out. Frequent, scanty or burning may be further evidence of bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper use of a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisons is the Doan's Pills. Thought Precious Stones Protection From Disease

In earlier times precious stones were supposed to have supernatural and medicinal powers. Certain stones gave protection from sorcerers or vampires, disease, poison or evil spirits. Others put a spell on enemies, enabled their owners to see distant events, cure illnesses, and look into the past or future. They were also believed to insure good luck.

Practically the only ideas of this kind surviving in Britain, says Pearson's London Weekly, are that pearls bring tears, that opals are unlucky and lose their brilliance while the person wearing them is ill.

Many a French bride will not wear pearls on her wedding day, believing them to be omens of tears to come.

There is an Egyptian belief that the surest way to test an emerald is to offer it to a snake; if it is genuine the snake will at once begin to lick it with its flickering tongue.

The ancient scientist Cardanus advised people to wear jet, to avoid nightmares; and Albertus Magnus declared that the emerald split as soon as it touched the skin of an adulterer.

The French used to believe that sapphires soaked in vinegar made a wonderful remedy for fevers, and that powdered sapphires cured inflamed eyes. A topaz, they thought, lost its transparency when brought into contact with poisons. To this day, the Burmese have the same name, chain, for arsenic and diamond, believing both to be deadly poisons.

The diamond was said in medieval Europe to have sex; the male stones glittered more brightly than the females, and brought higher prices. There is a saying in India that it is strengthening to wear amethysts.

ALL SMALL FISH NOT MINNOWS SAYS WARNING

Some people have the idea minnows are small fish, both game and otherwise. This is not true. Minnows are a distinct species of fish and do not grow up into large game fish. The important part of this story is that only the minnows may be seined and used for bait.

All small game fish which are caught in the minnow seine must be returned to the water without injury under the penalty of the law.

Air Spaces in Eggs

The air spaces in eggs are supposed to aid in the development of the embryo chick. The chick makes use of the air in this pocket during the brief period between the time when it begins to breathe and the time when it is strong enough to break through the shell with its beak. This air sac enlarges materially during incubation, and in a normal egg the chick at hatching time always has its head pointing toward the large end of the egg and the air space. It is the opinion of the United States bureau of animal industry that the air sac is formed by the contraction of the contents of the egg immediately after it is laid. The temperature of an ordinary hen's body is about 107 degrees Fahrenheit, and it is reasonable to suppose that as soon as an egg is laid the yolk and white contract somewhat. Because of the peculiar shape of the egg the air space is nearly always formed at the large end. Now and then it occurs on the side, but never at the small end.

"Hockey on Horseback" Is One of Oldest Games

Polo has sometimes been described as "hockey on horseback," and is not only one of the most exciting of sports, but it is one of the fastest games in the world, and one of the oldest, declares a writer in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

No one knows in what country polo originated, nor just how long ago it was first played. But there seems little doubt that it came from the East. The Persians were playing it 1,200 years ago. And the Chinese maintain that their ancestors took part in polo matches a thousand years before Christ was born.

More polo is played in India than in any other part of the world. It was brought from that country to England and about 1876 came to the United States. It is interesting to know that the wild hillmen of the Himalayas play a rough-and-tumble horseback game that in many ways is like the polo you will see at a match in this country or England.

The ponies which take part in a good polo game are specially trained to help their riders. They follow the ball like a terrier after a rat, and turn and gallop seemingly at the very thought of their riders, who are sending the ball toward their opponents' goal.

Some men tell their wives everything—even when they don't know it.

Silence is a virtue that is frequently overlooked by fools.

The people who always want their own way are apt to doubt the accuracy of the scales.

Some people aren't as bad as some people think.

NEW DEVOE 2-COAT SYSTEM

MAKES HOMES WHITER AND SAVES YOU 50%

- Makes your paint money go twice as far—outlasts other paints 2 to 1.
- Gives you a whiter job—or one with truer tints. Makes your home stand out.
- Stays clean, fresh and bright years after other paints streak.
- Saves one whole coat on new wood—2 coats do a better job than 3 have ever done before.
- Resists four great paint evils: checking, cracking, peeling, fading.

Because it covers perfectly in two coats instead of three or four—because it outlasts usual paints by 2 to 1—Devoe's 2-Coat System can save you 50% on painting costs.

Two different paints are used. The first seals pores in new wood, grips firmly on old paint. The second coat contains 18% more "hiding" units—retains freshness.

Come in and get all the facts about this new 2-Coat System. To get the best job at a saving, employ a reputable painter—specify Devoe.

Here's a New Red Cross Function: Solving the Soldier's Personal Problems, Paying Mortgages and Caring for Friend Wife!

By ALWYN W. KNIGHT

THE doughboy told his hard-luck story to the Red Cross field director stationed at Governor's island. The yarn had a Nick Carter ring, but the man in uniform was so in earnest you had to believe him. He said his father lived in Fayetteville, N. C. He said his father was out of work and was about to be put on the street. In fact the sheriff, so the story went, was as good as on the doorstep with the foreclosure papers in his hand.

Listening, you almost expected to hear a bugle call and the thunder of hoofs as the proverbial cavalry troop galloped to the rescue.

But this was melodrama plus. The skein of plausibility was there because the thing was so imminent. Actually there was but a day or so left before the foreclosure; and watching the boy's worried eyes helped visualize a dusty street in a sleepy southern town, and on it an elderly man surrounded by hand-me-down furniture with nothing left but the threadbare remnants of a tattered dignity.

The name of the Red Cross field director was J. F. O'Brien. Sitting behind his desk in the Red Cross house—a few steps from the ferry slip servicing Governor's island and Fort Jay—he heard the boy through without a word. Now he asked questions, then picked up a phone. Subsequently it all turned out right; that figurative cavalry troop, underwritten by the Red Cross, did gallop to the rescue. O'Brien contacted the Red Cross chapter in the town where the boy's father lived, instructing the chapter to verify the boy's story (routine) and advance money at once.

Melodramatic Finale.

So the old homestead was saved. And the doughboy repaid O'Brien out of his pay, and O'Brien repaid the chapter. It was the sort of job other Red Cross field directors in other military posts were doing all over the country that same morning for enlisted men of the army, navy, marine corps and coast guard.

This Red Cross help for the enlisted man and his family is an ambitious undertaking. It began when the country entered the World War. Now more than 60 men like O'Brien are stationed throughout the nation. These trained workers and their assistants "cover" 206 army posts and 8 army general hospitals. They cover 408 coast guard stations; 127 navy and marine corps stations; 10 navy general hospitals and St. Elizabeth's hospital in Washington, D. C.

O'Brien leaned back, frowning. "Just what do we do?" he echoed my question thoughtfully. "Well, we act as link between the enlisted man and his superior officer. And we also act as link between the enlisted man and his family. When the boys get in trouble, they come to us. They know that their confidences will never be violated!"

"Sort of an anti-A. W. O. L. agency," I suggested.

"Not exactly. Although there would undoubtedly be a lot more absent-without-leaves if it were not for the work we do."

"What," I asked, "are some of the contributing factors which cause a man to pick up and walk out—without the formality of asking permission?"

"Trouble at home, for one thing."

"Trouble at home?"

O'Brien thumbed through the papers on his desk. "Here's a job we did yesterday. A boy whose sister was critically ill. We arranged a furlough so he could go home and give a blood transfusion. Now if we had not arranged the furlough, I dare say he would have made the trip anyway—with unfortunate results."

Romance Is Rescued.

I asked O'Brien to give me another example of a Red Cross field director's routine and he told me about the doughboy, newly married, who was to be transferred from Bilboa, the Canal zone, to Fort Devons. The army paid his expenses, naturally, but what about the young wife who must remain behind because there was not money enough? Yes, the Red Cross again.

John O'Brien, Red Cross field director at Governor's island, New York, hears from Lieut. Thomas J. Marnane how his organization can best serve the enlisted man.

on, the Atlantic branch, United States disciplinary base, and the only military prison in the country. I was introduced to Major Christman, adjutant of the prison, and heard from him what the army thinks of the Red Cross.

"The army couldn't get along without the Red Cross," he said. "The work it does can not be done by anyone else. Mr. O'Brien and your other field directors supply the warm, personal touch which it is not feasible for the army itself to do."

Red Cross and the Navy.

To further pursue my investigation of the anti-A. W. O. L. artillery of the Red Cross, I left Governor's island and went to the New York navy yard at Brooklyn. There Red Cross Field Director Henry W. Rogers told me that peace-of-mind is as essential as discipline in the production of efficiency.

"If our bluejackets start worrying over family and personal troubles," he said, "they can't do the job they enlisted to do justice!"

I found Rogers in his stateroom on the receiving ship, the old U. S. S. Seattle. He had just finished talking with a sailor whose wife, in Texas, had been shown the door by her own mother. As a result, the sailor was at the address given, right enough; but that, since the address was a cemetery, the unfortunate parent had ceased to ail for a good many years.

To my mind, one of the most worthwhile things these military post Red Cross men do is contact the family of newly enlisted men. A card sent to a mother, and picked at random, gives this information:

"We advise that your son has enlisted and has been assigned for duty with the infantry in China. He is now at Fort Slocum waiting to sail which will probably be January 6, 1938, and until then address your letters to him care Overseas Recruit Depot, Second Recruit Co., Fort Slocum, N. Y. After he sails, address your letters care Commanding Officer, U. S. Troops in China, American Barracks, Tientsin, China. If further information is required, return this card with your query."

Last year the Red Cross at Governor's island sent 10,000 of these cards to next-of-kin of men recruited for overseas service. There is no measuring stick to tell what these routine notifications mean to the folks back home, but the reply of one mother is a conservative indication. "Your card gave me the will to go on living," she wrote. "My boy just disappeared, and not knowing he had enlisted, I thought he was dead, or alone and sick."

I talked with O'Brien a while longer, then went over the island's pris-

The men who hold down these Red Cross posts at military stations are in themselves remarkable. Each is carefully chosen. O'Brien, for example, is small, nimble-minded and emotionally sympathetic. Rogers, at the Brooklyn navy yard, has been through the mill; he knows all the answers; he sits up late nights, wondering if there isn't something else the Red Cross can do on some particular case.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
WILLIAM BRUCKART
PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON D. C.

Washington.—New Deal political have now reached an apparent nationwide scope in the strategy for control of the Democratic machinery. It is no longer a matter of if it ever were concealed—determined to lick Democratic representatives and senators have failed to respond to New Deal. This has happened repeatedly. President Roosevelt's repeated declarations that he is keeping off of all party primaries. In many states where in-party Democrats are so solidly entrenched that there is no chance of defeat them for renomination. The latest of numerous New Deal primary races is in Maryland. David J. Lewis, a representative many years, who is accounted a full-fledged New Dealer in all respects, has entered the race for senatorial nomination against Hillard Tydings, who has been the New Deal reservation times. Mr. Lewis is to be regarded as formidable opposition. He announced his candidacy after a visit to the White House, and he was none who failed to understand that he had the presidential things. It had been known since court reorganization fight that New Deal leaders were looking for someone to do battle against Senator Tydings.

The Lewis candidacy virtually completes the list. There will be no New Deal candidate against Senator Clark in Missouri. The reaction is that Senator Clark, despite frequent attacks on the New Deal program, can not be defeated in the Democratic nomination. The same is true about Senator Lomen of Connecticut. The New Deal board of strategy has no one for the Connecticut senator, but is rather firmly entrenched in the state. So it seems the way to press the situation is that the New Deal strategists do not hate him enough to run a candidate against him.

In Colorado, Senator Adams has position from an avowed New Dealer. Senator Adams has never been quite so outspoken as men like Clark, or Burke of Nebraska, or Wheeler of Montana, but he has been "suspected" of being none too friendly to the New Deal as a whole. The board of strategy, therefore, is giving no chances.

Senator Adams' opponent is Justice B. C. Hilliard. A few hundred miles to the westward, a son of Justice Hilliard is seeking the Democratic nomination for the senate in Nevada. He is after the scalp of Senator Pat McCarran, who has jumped off of the New Deal bandwagon when he disagreed with presidential programs. So it has been agreed that he, too, must go.

The Iowa battle is now over. In the fight, Harry Hopkins, professional reliever of destitution, sought aid Representative Wearin re-elected. Sen. Guy Gillette of the Democratic nomination for the senate. Hopkins outburst, given to newspaper correspondents here before the Iowa primary was: "If I were a voter in Iowa, I would support Otho Wearin against Gillette." That raised plenty of hot winds in the senate and, since it came on top of the Pennsylvania primaries and on top of Son Jimmy Roosevelt's endorsement of Senator Pepper in Florida, it gave a tip-off as to how far the thing was going. It was perhaps the Iowa meddling by Professor Hopkins that caused President Roosevelt to tell a press conference that he was taking no part at all in the state primaries. Prior to that time, however, he had quietly given his blessing to Senator McAdoo, over his several opponents in California; Senator Barkley, over "Happy" Chandler in Kentucky, and it is understood he has shown a preference for Senator Bulkley of Ohio, who is opposed for the Democratic nomination by former Gov. George White.

As is shown by the records, things are not all milk and honey for the 100 per centers who are seeking renomination. Mention was made of Bulkley in Ohio, and Barkley in Kentucky. Sen. Elmer Thomas of Oklahoma, the great advocate of cheap money and the man who forced congress to enact legislation allowing for printing of three billion dollars in new silver certificates, has opposition that promises a bitter fight to the end. The same is true of Senator Thomas of Utah, who is confronted with a campaign of a defensive character. He must show why he is so strong for the New Deal to win renomination in that state from which also comes Senator King. Senator King has been a violent opponent of the New Deal.

Then, there is another 100 per center in the far West. Sen. James P. Pope has to fight off the attack of Worth Clark for the senatorial nomination. Mr. Clark, now a member of the house of representatives, is said here to be making a battle of it for Senator Pope whose chief claim to fame seems to be that he fathered the agricultural act of 1938—and nobody knows yet how to make the law work. Clark's record is regarded by many colleagues in the house as proving him to be a Democrat of the liberal type, for he has supported the President on numerous occasions while voting against White House dictation when he felt that he should do so.

The New Dealers have persuaded Governor Johnston of South Carolina to run against Sen. "Cotton Ed" Smith. At least, it is the assumption that the governor was persuaded to enter the race.

There is a fight on in another southern state also. Sen. Walter F. George has opposition for the Democratic nomination. Lawrence Camp, United States attorney at Atlanta and a Roosevelt appointee, has filed for the nomination against Senator George. The understanding in Washington is that the New Dealers settled on Camp when they found that Governor Rivers of Georgia could not enter the fight because he was vulnerable on several points. Senator George, one of the ablest constitutional lawyers in the senate and long highly regarded in that body, apparently has a hard fight because of the likelihood of a divided vote. There are several other candidates in the field and it has been suggested that the vote may be so divided as to bring about defeat of Senator George.

Months ago, of course, Sen. Fred Van Nuys was marked for "liquidation" in Indiana because of his activity against the President's court bill. The state machine in Indiana is completely under the domination of former Gov. Paul McNutt, who aspires to the White House, himself, in 1940, and McNutt is sticking with the New Dealers.

But to turn to another phase of the interparty fight, the question of use of relief funds in politics has become hotter than a pan of boiling grease. Judge Brady Stewart, manager for Chandler in Kentucky, lately wrote a letter of protest to President Roosevelt, charging among other things that relief was being handed out only to persons "approved" by the Barkley faction of the party. From Pennsylvania there have been many squeals about political use of relief funds by Senator Guffey, and in neither case has there been proof that the charges are not true. Undoubtedly, if the WPA workers are being used politically in some places, they are being used in many places; it is a condition that must be expected if the country is going to turn relief of destitution over to politicians. They will fill their gullet first.

The death of an individual whom one does not know, however important the individual may be, creates only passing interest. Perhaps that is why so little attention was paid to the death, a few weeks ago, of Dr. George F. Warren. Professor Warren was nationally known as a Cornell authority on the economics of agriculture; he was known, too, for his famed experiment in causing hens to lay more eggs by keeping them in electrically lighted hen houses at night. But Professor Warren will go down in history for a much more important reason than either of these. It was he who convinced President Roosevelt that prices could be controlled by the federal government by means of changing the gold content of the dollar.

Our currency structure had remained much the same for 50 years until Professor Warren became an advisor, a consultant, for the New Deal. There had been many attempts, much fanfare, many blowings of trumpets, about "tight money" or "Wall Street control" of money, or various other ideas such as the free silver of Bryan days and the equally silly scheme of Senator Thomas of Oklahoma, who wanted to print three billion dollars in new paper money to bring the country out of the depression. The native intelligence and solidarity of the country, however, brought us safely through those periods until Professor Warren came on the scene.

One need not review how the Thomas scheme for printing money was forced through congress nor how the Warren plan for control of prices was propagandized until prices of the senate and the members of the senate and the house, knowing nothing about economic subjects, swallowed the proposal. The gold content of the dollar was lowered—the dollar was devalued, and the government kept the profit, amounting to more than two billion dollars.

The important thing to remember is that a great government made such a costly experiment on its 130,000,000 citizens, and failed. For it must be said that the Warren scheme for raising prices has failed.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

Woven Fillet for Bags and Purses.

EITHER crochet cotton or wool yarn in two or more colors may be used for a knitting bag or purses of woven fillet. The foundation is made in the lightest color. The knitting bag in the sketch is white fillet with navy blue threads woven through, as shown. The zipper purse and vanity pouch are ecru with carmine and Delft blue woven stripes. The plain spaces between the stripes are made by weaving through the fillet mesh with matching thread.

To start the fillet foundation, make a chain the length of your bag, then chain 5 more, turn, and make a double crochet in the 6th stitch from the hook. Chain 2, skip 2 and make a double crochet in next stitch. Repeat to end of row, then chain 5 and turn. *Make a double crochet in the top of the last double crochet. Chain 2. Continue across the row, then chain 5 and turn. Repeat from * until you have enough of the fillet mesh to make your bag or purse. The weaving is done with double thread and a large blunt needle. Work across and then back through each row of the fillet mesh as shown. When a new weaving thread is started, hide the ends in the edge of the crochet.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears' latest book gives complete directions for making many other things for yourself and to use as gifts. It also fully illustrates ninety embroidery stitches with interesting variations. You will use these again and again for reference. Ask for Book 2, enclosing 25 cents (coins preferred). Prize Winning Recipes To Be Announced Soon

C. Houston Goudiss, who writes our "WHAT TO EAT AND WHY" series, reports that the Cake Recipe Contest which he recently conducted through the columns of this newspaper was a gratifying success.

A tremendous number of recipes were submitted and the home economists on the staff of his Experimental Kitchen Laboratory in New York city have been busy for days testing and tasting almost every imaginable kind of cake. They report that our town has some very fine cake bakers!

They regret that it was impossible to acknowledge individual entries, but they thank every home-maker who entered the contest, and have asked us to say that each recipe will be given the most careful consideration.

Because of the volume of recipes submitted, they will require a little while longer to complete their tests and to arrive at their decision as to the winners of the $25.00 first prize, the five second prizes of $10.00 each, and the ten third prizes of $5.00 each.

Prize winners will be reported in these columns in the near future, and as announced at the beginning of the contest, prize winning recipes, together with those receiving honorable mention from the judges, will be printed in a booklet to be distributed nationally.

That's Luck

Luck doesn't float around the air
And light on Tom or Dick or Harry Just anyhow and anywhere.

The wit to know the thing you want,
The will to work, the faith to fight,
The strength to use but tempered tools

And only weapon honors bright;
The spirit and the spunk to dare,
The heart to hope, the grit to bear;

And when disaster falls, the grit to grin,
And start again—
That's luck.

Don't Get Hurt

Below are given some suggestions for "Safe Gardening" compiled by the National Safety Council:

Get first aid for any cut or scratch, no matter how slight it may seem to you.

In driving nails, start the nail with a few light taps, then remove your hand and proceed.

Replace split, broken or sharp-edged handles. Avoid splinter and other wounds.

Never leave a scythe or sickle hanging in a tree. Hang them, heads up, on the wall.

Promoting Flowers

In Pikeville, Ky., there is a bank which maintains large gardens to provide flowers for the desks in the bank and also for depositors. The bank also holds flower shows to encourage beautification of the town, and gives away seeds.

Local People Took Trip In Southern States

MANY POINTS OF INTEREST DESCRIBED BY ONE OF PARTY

(By Mrs. Glen Bridges)

Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Koerner, Mrs. Herman Bridges and Irene, and Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Bridges and Sharon left Klemme, June 8th at 6:00 o'clock a. m. We crossed the Iowa-Missouri line at 9:50 a. m. and ate dinner near Kansas City, Mo. At 6:15 p. m. we crossed the Ark. state line. At 8:30 we stopped for the day and stayed at a nice three room cabin on Mt. Gyler in the Ozarks. We drove 630 miles the first day.

On Thursday morning we left at 6:20. The farming in this section is just done on cleared spots on the sides of the hills. We ate dinner on a farmer's lawn near Nashville, Ark. He picked some big plums and gave them to us. He said the first crop of peaches were harvested already and the second was not ripe yet. We crossed the Red River bridge into Texas and only drove in this state about seven miles. Then we were in Louisiana. We had to make a twelve mile detour on a slippery mud road. We saw some very good farm land on this detour. The corn was about 5 1/2 feet high here. We arrived at Paul Stille's near DeRidder, La. at 9:30 p. m. we had driven 1,096 miles.

Paul Stille's are running a country store and filling station about 5 1/2 miles from DeRidder on a heavily traveled highway. They are enjoying a very nice business and it keeps the family busy working.

On Sunday night we went to a Negro Church. This was very interesting and we enjoyed the singing very much. One day "Sport" did some trucking for Paul and hauled 24 goats to be butchered for "Nigger Day," June 19th, the day the Negroes were freed. The Negroes celebrate and eat goat meat on that day.

Mrs. Bridges and Irene stayed at Paul's for an extended visit and when we left Irene was learning the store business.

We left Paul's on Thursday, June 16th. We stopped at Lake Charles and went through a cemetery where the people were buried in the southern cemeteries are this side on top of the ground. Most of way Then we went to the docks and saw a large ship from London which was loading pine lumber to be taken to Africa to be used in the diamond mines.

We left Lake Charles and arrived in Jennings where we enjoyed dinner with the Carl Suckow family. Carl has an oil business and is doing nicely. Warren is working for a plumber. In the afternoon we drove around and looked at irrigation pump stations and also an oil field near Jennings. We stayed at Suckow's for supper then we drove to Baton Rouge where we crossed the Mississippi River on a ferry. We stayed in a cabin at Baton Rouge. Friday morning we went to see the capitol which is a very beautiful building. We also saw where Huey Long was buried on the capitol grounds. We left Baton Rouge and arrived at New Orleans at 11:00 a. m. where we crossed the big Huey Long Bridge. This bridge is the longest free bridge in America and was erected at a cost of $13,000,000. The total length from railroad approach to end is 4 1/2 miles. The channel span over the navigation channel of the river is 790 feet. Two auto roadways, one on each side, are 18 feet wide. It took 3 years to construct this bridge. There are many bridges in Louisiana, having gone over 5 or 6 big bridges in one mile. Louisiana has no toll bridges.

At 1:40 p. m. we crossed the Mississippi state line then at 2:10 p. m. we crossed the Alabama state line. We stayed at Mobile Alabama. Saturday we went down to the dock and saw a great many big ships. The ones that were loading were the "Leerdam" from Holland, "Ferglen" from Norway and "Mother Luckenbach" from the west coast. The boats were loading pig iron, sheet iron, paper and lumber.

We left Mobile and crossed the Florida line at 10:35 a. m. At Pensacola we went through Camp Baracas, the U. S. Naval Academy. We crossed back into Alabama and stopped at Montgomery to see the capitol building.

Sunday morning we left camp at 6:45. The peaches were ripe here and every farm had a road stand. We had some real mountain roads going into Birmingham. At 12:30 p. m. we crossed into Tennessee and at 5:15 p. m. into Kentucky. The land looks pretty good here and we saw tobacco, corn and oats in shocks. We crossed a toll bridge over the Ohio River and stayed at Evansville, Indiana.

Monday we left at 8:15 and crossed the Wabash River into Ill. Here we saw some fine wheat fields. At 6:00 p. m. we again crossed the Mississippi River into Iowa at Keokuk. We saw the dam and stayed there all night.

Tuesday morning we stopped at Fort Madison to see the state prison. We then came right home and got here at 3:00 p. m. We drove 3,228 miles. We had a very good trip and after seeing all these other states Iowa can't be beat for farming.

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. What benefits does a Corn Belt farmer receive from cooperation in the 1938 AAA program?

A. A farmer who cooperates in the 1938 farm program receives: (1) Definite benefit payments for crop adjustment; (2) payments for conserving and improving the fertility of his soil, and (3) privilege of taking out a federal corn loan.

Q. How are county corn allotments set?

A. (1) The amount of corn needed for national domestic consumption and for exports is estimated. (2) To this is added an ever-normal granary reserve nearly twice as large as normal. (3) The carry-over from previous crops is subtracted from that amount. The result is the national production goal, and this is changed to a national acreage goal. (4) The acreage which the non-commercial area normally plants is subtracted from the national goal. This leaves the goal for the commercial corn area and the allotment for this area is the acreage that would be planted if every farm planted within the acreage allotment. (5) The allotment for the commercial area is apportioned among the states and counties in the area on the basis of the acreage of corn planted during the past ten years, with adjustments for normal weather conditions, trends, and for participation in previous AAA programs.

Q. How are county corn acreage allotments apportioned to individual farms?

A. The county corn acreage allotments are apportioned to individual farms on the basis of tillable acres, crop rotation practices, type of soil and topography. The acreage planted in preceding years accounts for crop rotation practices. A soil management report made on every farm in the North Central Region established an acreage of corn which would represent what was thought to be the best soil management practice for farms. This soil management report accounts for the tillable acres, type of soil and topography, including productivity of the farm. In most cases, equal weight is given in the 1938 program to the acreage planted in preceding years and the soil management report. In the few cases where the soil management report alone would give a farm an acreage more nearly representing usual farming practices in the community, it is used alone.

Q. Do farmers who have been over-cropping their land receive the greatest reductions in their acreage?

A. Under the 1938 program the equal weight given to previous acreages and to the soil management report makes the adjustments greater for those farmers who have been overcropping their land.

Q. Why do farmers who have not been overcropping their land have any reductions in their acreage?

A. The immediate danger of surpluses and low prices makes substantial acreage adjustments necessary. These adjustments will help to support prices received by farmers. For the most part, the farmers who have been overcropping their land during low price years are those farmers who were in severe financial straits and planted large acreages in an effort to get much needed cash. Thus, it would work upon them a tremendous hardship if they were asked to make all the needed acreage adjustments in any particular year. Since the farmers who have not been overcropping their land will receive benefits through higher prices because of the programs, they should be asked to bear a share of the needed acreage adjustments.

Grain Belt Prepares For 'Hopper Attack

Poison Bait Offensive Awaits Insects as Federal, State Farm Leaders Seek Means of Protecting This Year's Bumper Crop

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

Kids enjoy devilish pranks. Remember how we used to catch grasshoppers, pull their legs and watch them "spit tobacco"?

Innocent fun, perhaps, but today the lowly grasshopper takes his revenge. In Biblical days there were locust plagues, but no worse than the year-after-year grasshopper menace that has damaged America's most verdant crops every summer since the early 1930s. Preventative measures have met with minor success; this year the United States department of agriculture warns of an even worse invasion.

'Hoppers swarm like a horde of angry bees from one field to the next, ripping their way through ripening grain and leaving a path of desolation. They cut away fence posts, destroy shrubbery and finally splatter their gorged bodies against the windshield of a passing car. Sometimes they blacken the air and make men fear the millennium has arrived.

But when fall comes the grasshoppers disappear and farmers breathe easier, hoping the plague is gone forever. Then comes winter and with it come entomologists from state and federal departments of agriculture. They dig in the resting soil and shake their heads. Last year's grasshoppers have deposited millions of eggs which will hatch under favorable conditions and bring more trouble next summer.

This routine has been repeated for several years but farm men have not been idle. They've discovered the most effective method of combating 'hoppers is poison bait, a mixture of bran, sawdust, blackstrap molasses, crude arsenic and water. Innumerable tons of this delectable diet have been offered the grasshoppers since 1930; this year an estimated 178,000 tons will be needed and much of it will be supplied by the federal government.

Summer Morning's Pastime.

Poison bait is spread in the fields during late spring or early summer, before the 'hoppers get started. Any morning this month you can drive through a midwestern farm area and watch it being spread from a wagon or truck.

Unlike humans, grasshoppers are particular when they eat and the bait spreaders must be patient. In ordinary summer weather the feeding time is from 8 a. m. until noon. They figuratively stay in bed if the temperature is less than 65 degrees; moreover they can't be bothered with food if it's warmer than 90 degrees.

The grasshopper's private life is an interesting chapter in the study of entomology. He hatches from an egg which is buried in the soil by his mother the previous autumn. As many as 441 eggs are known to have been deposited in one tunnel.

In contrast to many other injurious insects, the grasshopper when newly hatched closely resembles his parents except that he lacks wings. Almost immediately upon emerging from the egg he is able to hop about quite actively, beginning his life of destruction. Forty to sixty days later he has grown into maturity.

During the growth period he sheds his skin five or six times. Cast-off skins are often mistaken for dead grasshoppers and are frequently the basis for mistaken reports that grasshoppers are "dying by the millions."

Fight for Existence.

Man is not the grasshopper's only enemy. Throughout its brief life the insect is plagued by parasitic two-winged flies which deposit maggots on the 'hopper. These maggots devour the internal portions of the grasshopper's body and soon cause its death.

But one of the most important factors in grasshopper control is the bird. Except for those living solely on vegetable matter, birds feed on 'hoppers and destroy large numbers of them. The assertion has often been made that grasshoppers are now so abundant because game birds are less numerous than formerly. But the worst grasshopper outbreaks in American history occurred in the great plains region 50 to 60 years ago when game birds were far more plentiful than now.

For years it has been believed that when grasshoppers come they remain seven years, destroying crops annually. After this period has elapsed they allegedly return to normalcy and are only a minor crop hazard until the next outbreak occurs. No definite proof of this theory has ever been offered.

It has been established, however, that dry, warm weather is favorable for grasshoppers and that the most severe outbreaks occur either during or following periods of drouth. Perhaps most drouth cycles are about seven years long, which would explain the 'hopper tradition.

Rains Haven't Helped.

But wet weather is unfavorable and great numbers of grasshoppers often die during wet springs from disease. Such is not the case this year, however, when the department of agriculture is planning the most active anti-grasshopper campaign in its history. The current spring has been wet in the Middle West and great plains area but grasshoppers will be bad anyway. Says the bureau of entomology:

"Recent rains over a wide belt in the Middle West and great plains area have much delayed the hatching of grasshoppers and have held those which have hatched in the edges of fields. But the reported mortality because of weather has been low. Not enough have been killed to permit any letting down in the control campaign. The delayed development of the grasshoppers and growth of vegetation have kept grasshoppers out of the crops, but it is too early to indicate that control will not be needed over this wide area.

"The delayed hatch may make it necessary to make several applications of poison bait, rather than one or two, which would be sufficient if all the 'hoppers hatched at about the same time."

Widespread outbreaks are expected this year in South Dakota, Montana, Oregon, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas. The greatest trouble is expected in North and South Dakota, which together will require 65,000 tons of hopper bait. Total requirements this year for the entire nation are expected to be 178,000 tons; two states will need one-third of it!

Extra Generations.

The situation is made more acute by an unprecedented happening last fall. Whereas grasshoppers are known to hatch only once a year, last fall an extra generation appeared which ruined considerable fall sown grain and added greatly to the number of eggs which passed the winter in the soil.

GRASSHOPPERS—A menace to American agriculture that equals dust storms and drouth.

Recognizing that successful control measures depend on co-operation, well-organized campaigns are already under way in many states headed by a trained entomologist who generally works with county agents. In turn come township and community leaders, mixing stations and bait-spreading crews. County financing has supported a large part of the campaign.

Last year 79,291 tons of poison bait were supplied at an approximate cost to the federal government of $1,104,000. This made possible a harvest, in many sections where without control the crops would have been a complete loss. State co-operators estimated that crops worth more than $100,000,000 were saved in the north central and great plains area. But despite these savings, the losses to crops where hoppers were not controlled reached nearly $66,000,000.

Such is the picture of America's current agricultural pain-in-the-neck, a perennial nuisance that has driven more than one farmer to driven insanity. Adding to the discomfort is the fact that these plagues have descended with greatest wrath upon those states which have suffered most harshly from drouth and dust storms during the past eight years.

Disaster's Bedfellow.

Perhaps it is logical that grasshoppers, dust and drouth should go hand in hand and that one of these pestilences should lead to another. Lack of moisture encourages grasshoppers. The 'hoppers, in turn, destroy foliage and loosen the earth to be swept about at the mercy of a strong wind.

More than one visitor from the industrial East has looked upon this desolation and turned his eyes away, swearing that drouth, dust and 'hoppers will never be conquered. But there's always another year and each spring the 'hopper belt farmer faces life confidently, imbued with an undying faith that his luck must eventually change.

So it follows that again this year he thinks it will change. Probably it will, because never since 1929 has the great plains area been so plentifully showered with spring rains. Maybe the rain will kill these grasshoppers; maybe the weather will become freakish and keep them from doing great damage; maybe the poison bait will work better than before.

Maybe. At least we'll hope so!

What's New in Swim and Beach Togs

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

TWO features stand out pre-eminently in connection with this season's swim and beach togs, namely the vast variety of materials in use, the other the fact of the dressmaker touch given their styling. It adds to the interest that gadgets in the way of costume jewelry tuned to sea and sand and outdoor themes usually complete the "picture" of each costume.

Citing a few of the smartest materials employed, first and foremost comes lastex, which is a boon to womankind in that it conforms to "lines" perfectly with a magic this-way, that-way stretching quality which solves the problem of clothes that fit, retain their shape and offer perfect comfort. The big sensation this season is the swim suit of black satin lastex with beach cape to match, completing the sense of luxury. Flower printed lastex ensembles also have their place in the style parade along water edge and sea line.

Other interesting materials employed for playtime clothes and wardrobes for water nymphs include celanese rayon moire, celanese rayon sharkskin, silk prints of fast color, linens in monotone or spectacular print and cottons so sturdy, so handsome, words fail of describing. Then there's wear-for-ever denim, and washable gabardine, so reliable when it comes to the wear and tear of riotous waves or strenuous mountain climbs.

Another feature that fashion spotlights is the use of striking color contrasts, perhaps in the way of playing up print with plain or the modernistic gesture of making the costume one vivid solid color boldly contrasted by another startling color on a sort of fifty-fifty basis.

The models pictured are typical of this season's swim suit and beach ensemble trends. Centered in the group you see a stunning outfit that tunes superbly to a statuesque figure.

ure. This comely young woman is wearing black trunks with printed "bra" of celanese rayon sharkskin. A catalin fish pin on her hip answers the call for suitable costume jewelry.

To the right, fashion offers a new bathing suit ensemble that strikingly combines white with bright ocean-blue. The bodice top is blue with catalin fish pin by way of correct gadgetry. The blue beach coat with monk's hood of blue lined with white adds to eye-appeal. This very new and attractive ensemble is of celanese rayon jersey.

A very interesting costume, as shown to the left, uses blue and white cotton print for the beach cape lined with white terry cloth, worn over a loose-fitting white terry cloth suit. Accessory is white catalin Vienne stag horn bracelet with carved edelweiss. This costume won an award and is an adaptation of an Algerian man's costume from the Traphagen costume museum.

To supplement the list of materials smartly in use for beach dress and bathing suit, hosiery should be mentioned. It is ranked along with sharkskin for shorts and slacks and shirts. Then there are the fascinating crinkle cottons that make such practical and attractive beach coats. Water, sun or sand dim not their beauty or colorfulness.

One of the cleverest ideas is the quilted floral cotton prints. A bolero of quilted print worn with matching printed broadcloth slacks together with a peasant kerchief of the same print is a happy suggestion. Try this ensemble, it's a winner this season.

ACCENT ON POCKETS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The more decorative and useful the pockets that your dress, jacket, suit or blouse proudly boasts the better. Here you see a pretty lassie framed in a background of apple blossoms wearing a white culotte outfit in new celanese rayon suiting fabric. This attractive playtime costume is pocketed to a nicety, each pocket enhanced with hand-run vari-colored stitching. Just because amusing gadgets are essential in the scheme of things this season, this outdoor girl pins a novelty catalin brooch at her throat in the shape of a college girl's cap with tassel.

WONDERS ARE BEING DONE WITH RIBBONS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

After you have looked about at the new dress collections the thought stays with you that this is decidedly a ribbon season. Summer dresses are given a sprightly look with pert little bows here and there while ribbons galore, wide, narrow in one color or in mingled tones or tri-color gayety are swathed and sashed about the waist with utmost artistry.

So utterly have designers yielded to the ribbon urge they are creating clever boleros entirely of ribbon and recently a leading Paris couturiere fashioned an entire dress of ribbon sewing it edge to edge for slender effect and for wide hemline letting the ribbon ends fly out loose over a silken foundation.

Lots of ribbons on hats this season, too, for bindings, bands and tailored bows and for floating streamers and bonnet ties are seen.

Frisly-Frisly Guimpes or Vestees Have Blouse Look

With the classic suit or the more softly tailored bolero-and-skirt costume you are expected to wear the daintiest, frilliest blouse or guimpe or vestee you can find. Of course, if you expect to remove the jacket, it's a blouse you must have. However, with the jacket on, a lacy, fluttery crisp and sheer false front is just the thing. They cost less than a blouse and they are showing such fascinating ones in neckwear departments, you will yield to the impulse to buy another and another—which, when you stop to consider, is a fine gesture in real economy.

Sailor Hats

The newest sailor hats have a wide range—from straw to oilcloth.

BOOKS IN BRIEF

O. Henry Tell Tale of 'Co And Another

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

A DRY leaf fluttered into Soapy's lap. That would be the card of Jack Frost. In fact last night Soapy had noticed winter was approaching because three newspapers adroitly displayed did not keep out the chill as he on his favorite park bench. Soapy disliked the cold months, but a little luck, he would manage.

Being an observant man, Soapy had learned long ago that there were two alternatives for him in the winter: Philanthropy or Law. The former carried with it certain circumstances that interfered with a gentleman's privacy, as baths and such. So, Soapy had long favored the Law which did not meddle with his tastes as an individual.

Since he must do something at once about the cold weather, and since there was nothing to deter him, he might as well begin at once. There were certain activities Soapy knew carried ninety on the Island, where there was and food, and clothing enough.

Soapy went into a not too respectable looking restaurant and ordered a pleasing dinner. When he dined slowly and with precision announced that he had no more and suggested that the waiter a cop. The next instant Soapy gathering himself together off sidewalk.

Soapy Is Luckless.

The second method would be work. Picking up a brick slammed it into a plate glass window. When the cop came, Soapy said "Here I am, I did it." The answered, "Who are you trying to kid, wise guy?" And was off to catch a man who was running a street car.

Those were two of Soapy's cards, but he still had a few up sleeve. Across the street stood a modest looking girl, gazing at winter styles. He sidled up to cleared his throat, and carried the usual antics of a masquerade. He walked slowly along, Soapy a

ONCE IN PRISON

William Sidney Porter was born in 1862 in Greensboro, N. C. O. Henry, his pen name, came later. As a young man he went to Austin, Texas, where he worked in a bank. It was there that the embezzlement of $10,000 occurred, a crime that has never been really cleared up. However, Porter was sentenced to serve five years in an Ohio penitentiary for the crime.

In prison he settled down to a concentrated program of writing. In 1903 he contracted with the New York World to do a story, week at $100 each.

When he died in 1910, his body was interred in Asheville, N. C. Of him the Encyclopedia Britannica states, "The tragedy of his own life taught him a character of tenderness for the unlucky."

her. There was a cop nearby. Soapy was counting on. Finally girl turned, caught Soapy's eye and whispered, "I would have loved you sooner, but the cop was waiting and I had to figure it out. She hung onto him as to an friend, but at the next corner Soapy bolted. He didn't want anything to do with women.

Disturbing the peace is a sure thought Soapy, tugging at his coat to hold it closer, drunks and craves people are always locked up. Accordingly he began his act, yawned and dancing around wildly. The bystanders, he explained, one of them Yale lads celebrated the game. We've instructions to leave them be."

Fatalistic End.

Soapy was disheartened. What if it take to rate the three months on the Island? He mused over his possibilities, and like a homing pigeon he rambled along the avenue toward Madison Square Garden. Presently he passed a cathedral dark except for one window. It was rimmed with light. Soapy looked, and then his ear caught the pulsing tones of a pipe organ. What in the world? An anthem, one he did things inside of Soapy. He thought of all the forbidden thoughts, of his mother, of a respect was a little boy and had a respectable way of living. These thoughts upset him until the result was Soapy gave up his idea of spending the winter on the Island. He would get a job, he would be somebody and show the world!

A familiar touch sent a shiver down his arm. Looking up he saw the broad face of a cop. "You doin'?"

Soapy answered, "Nothin'."

"Then come along."

The Magistrate gave him the months on the Island on a charge of vagrancy.

Ink Spots And Spatters

By Jergie

During the past six weeks while I was off the job nursing along a bad infection in my leg, I got caught up on my much neglected reading. In looking over the many exchanges I got a kick out of some of the columns conducted by the various editors in north Iowa.

Ray Sperberk of the Swea City Herald has his "Phillip Space" column; Marjory E. Roberts in her husband's Britt News Tribune has her "Confab" where the women talk it over. Prewitt & Prewitt in their Forest City Summit conduct "The Fig Tree"; Earl Hall has his "Eye Observing" and Enoch Norman conducts his "Straws, showing where the wind blows, both features in the Mason City Globe-Gazette. There are many more and the columns seem to have a needed place on the editorial page.

I will make an endeavor to keep the Ink Spots and Spatters a weekly (or should I say "weakly") feature in the Klemme Times. The name has nothing to do with the column. Most column names are meaningless, so "Ink Spots and Spatters" is as good as "Ike and Mike," or any other column name.

This column will be used chiefly for letting off editorial steam, comments and miscellaneous subjects which do not fit into the news section.

I will be big hearted in matters and will welcome contributions and comments... providing the articles are signed. So much for that.

That was a mighty swell meeting the Civic Club staged Thursday evening and the business man who failed to attend really missed out on a big time. The Music Mothers Club cooked and served the banquet and everyone agrees it was a "swell feed"

For entertainment "Bob Burns and Bing Crosby" of Britt provided a half hour of laughs for the crowd. These boys are plenty clever and better than the original.

Earl Hall of the Mason City Globe Gazette was the speaker. Earl mixed right in with the boys and we enjoyed having him with us. He made a few dirty cracks about the writer and put "Hank" Galbreth on the pan. Earl said we wouldn't print his speech correctly if it was reported and just for that we will leave it out. Earl, who is president of the Iowa Safety Council has two speeches: a commencement address and a safety talk. The commencement talk is printable

And that reminds me about one on Earl. My friend Hall is so "safety-minded" that he eats safety, sleeps safety, talks safety and is completely nuts on the subject. The other day during the band festival at Mason City, Earl and several other of the big shots around Mason City were invited to the dinner at the Hanford Hotel given in honor of the Band Queens from the many nearby towns. Earl (Safety First Hall) appeared on the scene in his best. Hitched to his pants was not only a belt, but a pair of good strong suspenders. After all, an Editor must keep his pants up, even in the midst of a bevy of queens!!

The Club had as their guest the young man who won the $5.00 slogan contest, Victor Greimann. His slogan "Klemme, Little But Lively" is a perfect fit for our town. Ira Overholt, chairman of the slogan committee presented "Vic" with the five bucks and if I am a good guesser he made good use of it. Congratulations, "Vic."

The cat might just as well be let out of the bag now as anytime. Klemme is seriously considering the building of a new school house and will receive a substantial amount of government aid in the project.

The whole thing in a nut shell amounts to just this: Klemme can not afford to wait a few years and then build. Right now a building can be erected without any noticeable increase in taxes as the government aid will amount to 45 per cent of the money expended for site and for building.

The school board had one hundred per cent backing by the club when the proposition was explained and submitted for their approval. More details about this later.

Two electric lighted signs will be placed on the highway leading into Klemme from the west by the Central States Electric Co. in the very near future and may be erected by the time this paper goes to press. Just another improvement which proclaims to the world that Klemme is "Little but Lively!"

And I wonder if next year the council will again forget to do something about improving the street from the paving east along the Main Street. This particular piece of road gets a lot of abuse and the dust cloud which hangs along the street permanently looks like an Oklahoma sand storm.

I have heard it hinted that property owners along the street might be induced to "kick-in" on a black top or stabilized surface.

More power to our volunteer fire company. Those boys certainly are "go-getters" and they accomplished the seemingly impossible when they started a drive to get a new fire truck. They reached their goal and soon they will be sporting one of the finest pieces of fire fighting equipment in North Iowa.

And in case you are wondering what the I-S-A-S inserted between each column stands for, I'll repeat it means Ink Spots and Spatters.

To put Earl Hall on the pan once more and toast him so he will stay done for a while I will let the readers (if any) in on one of his family secrets.

Earl and his better half were strolling around Mason City the other evening and stopped to admire a beautiful house recently built by a gentleman in the bottling works business. The Missus says, "Earl, if you would bottle your hot air instead of printing it, we could have a fine home like that too."

Another good reason for ambitious young men to keep away from ink, type and news print!

You asked for it, Earl, here 'tis!

Cosmic Rays Created by Annihilation of Elements in Space

Washington.—New evidence for the creation of powerful cosmic rays through the annihilation of the universe's commonest chemical elements, sparsely scattered in the far reaches of space, was presented here before the meeting of the National Academy of Science by Dr. Robert A. Millikan, Nobel prize-man, of the California Institute of Technology.

The first evidence obtained by science that the sun's magnetic field extends out into space, enveloping the earth and the whole solar system, has also resulted from Dr. Millikan's latest cosmic ray researches.

Millikan, with his colleagues, Drs. I. S. Bowen and H. Victor Neher, probed the earth's atmosphere with balloons practically to its top. They found that the way in which the energy in incoming, highly penetrating cosmic rays is distributed gives evidence for the annihilation theory of cosmic ray production.

Elements That Are Destroyed.

The most abundant elements that are destroyed in creating cosmic rays are carbon, nitrogen, and oxygen, together with relatively high percentages of sodium, silicon, and aluminum. These are among the commonest elements in the universe. The elements that give rise to cosmic rays range in atomic weight between 6 and 28.

Hydrogen, and perhaps helium, are also known to be extremely plentiful throughout the universe, and the fact that no cosmic rays corresponding to their energy of annihilation have been found gave Dr. Millikan his lead to the newly recognized extent of the sun's magnetic field.

The earth's magnetic field has been known to change the direction of cosmic rays. Similarly, the sun keeps the less powerful rays of hydrogen and helium origin from getting to earth.

Seedless Tomatoes Grown by the Use of Chemicals

Columbia, Mo.—Tomatoes without seeds are being grown in the department of horticulture at the University of Missouri here by use of chemicals.

Normally tomatoes require pollination and fertilization to set fruit, but that also means that seeds will be formed. So the Missouri workers pinch out the parts of the flower that produce the pollen, thus stopping fertilization, and then seek another stimulus in the form of a growth-promoting substance, or hormone, to cause the fruit to set.

The result is that tomatoes develop normally, but instead of containing seeds and pulp, the tomatoes are solid meat. The fruit is of normal size, but weighs more because it is solid.

The hormone used is indoleacetic acid dissolved in lanum paste at the rate of one part acid to 500 parts paste. About three applications, put on a week or ten days apart, are required.

Crusher Destroys Water Hyacinth in the South

New Orleans.—Water hyacinth, one of the worst obstacles to navigation in waters of the South, can be successfully kept in control by a new type of crusher tested out by the United States army engineer corps, with headquarters here.

The new boat, called the Kenny, mounts a wide chain conveyor belt forward. This scoops up the floating plants and carries them up and back to a hopper. From there they fall between heavy corrugated rollers which crush them flat. The pulped remains, washed overboard through a pipe, sink to the bottom and decay.

Longest Single Span Girder Is in New York

New York.—New York city's West Side express highway, pride of a traffic-ridden city, boasts the longest single-span plate girder in the United States.

Bridging the New York Central railroad tracks at West One Hundred and Sixtieth street, a girder 190 feet 2 inches long overall and 188 feet 1 1/2 inches between supports carries the massive streamlined highway. It was fabricated in two approximately equal lengths to meet railroad loading requirements and shipping clearances and to facilitate handling.

Wide Uses Predicted for "Windmill" Plane That Has No Wings

By LEONARD H. ENGEL
Washington.—Write this in your book: A place in the air for the "windmill" aircraft within five years.

Aviation men and others here are freely predicting widespread adoption of the new autogiro that is emerging today from years of quiet experimental work without benefit of publicity. A rapidly-growing list of uses is being compiled for new varieties of the "windmill" plane that can do things no ordinary airplane can duplicate.

I went up in one of the new autogiros demonstrated here by W. Wallace Kellett of Philadelphia.

We took off in 25 feet. We landed almost literally on a dime—the wheels struck the earth and stopped, hardly moving a millimeter.

Up in the air we stood stock still, we moved sideways, we turned as though an axle pierced the fuselage.

And the pilot did all that simply by maneuvering the three whirling blades above the fuselage of the newest type of rotatable wing aircraft.

Abilities such as these have the army interested. Navy men are curious, too, and so are foresters, coast guardsmen, persons concerned with air mail, and others.

Autogiro Has No Wings.

The autogiro has come a long way during the decade since the late Senor Juan de la Cierva, its inventor who was killed in the crash of a transport plane in 1936 in just the kind of accident he sought to prevent with his odd-looking craft, brought it to the United States.

Today, the trim machine demonstrated by Kellett has no wings, depending for its lift entirely on the whirling blades. With a 225 horsepower motor powering a propeller to give it forward speed and turning the overhead blades for the take off, the autogiro can make 125 miles an hour; it can lift more, rise more sharply and quickly than the predecessors which attracted so much attention hardly more than half a dozen years ago.

And technical men in various fields and government services are seeing quickly that its uncanny maneuverability will find ready application.

The army wants it for "spotting" artillery fire and for observation and reconnoitering. You could have drawn a detailed picture of Washington while we were above it, so nearly motionless did we hover. The autogiro would also be useful for liaison operations.

The navy may find it useful for "spotting" naval gunfire for it has the advantage of being able to hover, yet being so maneuverable that it can follow the course of an enemy fleet.

Airplanes are already in wide use for dusting fields with insect poisons, but it is a risky business, moving along at nearly 100 miles an hour only a few feet above the ground. Hence, another use is seen for the autogiro: hovering a few feet above the ground spreading a chemical cloud is not a risky business for the rotatable wing aircraft. Spotting diseased trees has also been successfully accomplished.

Lindbergh's "Glass Heart" Keeps Many Organs Alive

Philadelphia.—Col. Charles Lindbergh's invention, the "glass heart," has been used in over 900 experiments, totalling about 100,000 hours, to keep alive a large variety of organs from human beings and lower animals, Dr. Alexis Carrel of the Rockefeller institute announced here before the meeting of the American Philosophical society. He added:

"The method has reached the stage where it can be profitably applied to many problems in the fields of anatomy, physiology, biological chemistry, and pathology."

Among organs kept alive and working, for periods varying from two to thirty days, were hearts, lungs, livers, kidneys, spleens and other glands; arteries, veins, nerves, muscles, joints, and reproductive organs. The hearts kept on beating, the glands continued to secrete, and other organs continued their functions in the circulating medium.

"Vegetable Sheep" Brought From Colombian Mountains

Washington.—"Vegetable sheep"—plants covered so thickly with long, white-woolly leaves that from a distance they look like grazing sheep on the hillside—are the newest additions to botanical knowledge at the United States national herbarium here. They are described through the agency of the Smithsonian institution by Dr. S. F. Blake of the bureau of plant industry, Department of Agriculture.

The plants belong to the aster family, and come from the Santa Marta mountains in Colombia, South America. The only "vegetable sheep" hitherto known were from New Zealand. Another strangely shaped plant from the Santa Marta mountains is known as the "monk plant"; at a little distance, especially through a light fog, a group of them looks like an assembly of robed priests.

★ Speaking of Doubles ★ Flynn Out—Lynn In ★ Musical Lombardos
—By Virginia Vale

WHEN you see "Robin Hood" you're going to see some remarkable archery; it will look as if Errol Flynn is a wizard with the bow and arrow. But the man behind the bow was really Howard Hill, and you will be able to see him in a film of his own before long—one of those Pete Smith shorts. Hill will go William Tell one better by lining up fifteen pretty girls with apples on their heads and shooting the apples off.

Remember the days when no studio would ever admit that any actor had a double for any stunt? They used to make Douglas Fairbanks have one sometimes, when the stunt was too dangerous—and he'd manage to do it himself when the cameras weren't grinding, just to show that he wasn't afraid.

Speaking of Flynn—recently he worried Warner Brothers no little. He bought a new yacht, and decided to go on a six months' trip in search of adventure. The executives objected. They finally gave him three weeks off. He had to go to Miami to get the yacht; he was to sail it through the canal, and fly to Hollywood to work in "Sister Act." Off he went, and off he stayed. He spent four weeks in Miami. A studio representative went after him, and went back without him. So Jeffrey Lynn, whose face isn't exactly familiar on the screen as yet, was given the lead in "Sister Act," with everybody cheering for him, and now the studio's delighted with his work. It may be another of those cases where a star walks out and a new star walks right in.

If Jeffrey Lynn does climb to stardom he can thank Bette Davis for giving him a start. While appearing in a road company of a New York stage success he was given a screen test by Metro. Nothing came of it so far as Metro was concerned, but Miss Davis saw the test and wanted Lynn for a role in "Jezebel." He didn't get it, but Warner Brothers liked the test and gave the young man a contract.

They're admitting now that the clever Miss Davis was right when she refused to play in "Comet Over Broadway," saying that the story and dialogue weren't up to scratch. One newspaper man called it "a very badly written story full of inane dialogue."

Jimmy Cagney has bought three tractors for his farm at Martha's Vineyard, and would rather talk crops than movies any day. They're a smart family, those Cagneys; his sister took honors at Hunter college the other day.

Unlike some news broadcasters, Boake Carter writes his own stuff. But he has able assistance from his wife, who used to be society editor of a Philadelphia newspaper.

ODDS AND ENDS—Judging by recent demonstrations, it looks as if television would be in its infancy for a long time to come. . . . Helen Hayes is willing to return to the movies if somebody can find her a story as good as "Farewell to Arms." . . . "Farewell," etc., has recently been rejected, because of the mix-up in international affairs, and will be re-issued. . . . If "Woman Against the World" comes your way you'll see Alice Moore, daughter of Alice Joyce, in a leading role. . . . The novel, "Sixteen Hands," has been bought for the screen for Bob Burns; it's a story about a mule. . . . He'll do "Arkansas Traveler" too. . . . And he went to court the other day to ask that the records he made in 1933 and 1934 be kept out of circulation, on the ground that they injure his reputation as a creative artist. . . . In 1934 he made $1500; in 1937, $400,000. . . . Nothing like getting a good "break," and deserving it! . . .

C. Houston Goudiss Offers More Advice About Reducing

Describes the Perils of Unscientific Methods for Losing Weight

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th Street, New York City

MY RECENT discussion of reducing in these columns brought many letters, indicating that the modern woman is, fortunately, weight conscious. This is an encouraging sign. For it shows that you are alert to the dangers of overweight, which not only destroys beauty but may indirectly contribute to heart disease, kidney disorders and diabetes, which take their greatest toll from among the heavyweights.

Guard Against Unscientific Reducing Methods

Some of these letters caused me great concern, however, because they indicate that in spite of my warning against unscientific methods of weight reduction, many women still cling to the idea that there is some magic in the various pills, powders, capsules, saps, salts and mechanical devices that are sold at fancy prices and hold out alluring promises of speedy reducing without dieting or exercise.

It is bad enough that most of these fail to reduce. For they may delay the day when the victim of overweight will undertake a sound and scientific program of weight reduction that will effectively take off weight—thus improving appearance, benefiting health and increasing the chances of longevity. But what is far more serious is that some of these preparations may endanger health or cause lifelong physical impairment.

Dangerous Drugs

Drugging is particularly to be condemned, and no one should attempt to reduce by this method except under the advice and watchful eye of a physician. There are many invalids today who would be happy and healthy if they had not attempted to take some "reducing medicine" without consulting a physician.

One preparation that is still bought by foolish women—in spite of repeated warnings against its use—may even result in permanent blindness.

Almost equally objectionable are excessive purging—which may leave you a wobbly wreck—and fasting, which is even more dangerous to women than men.

Don't Diet Without Direction

A carefully regulated diet will not only maintain normal weight, but will banish overweight by forcing the body to burn its own excess fat as fuel. Having heard of this scientific principle, many women frantically and foolishly attempt to prescribe their own reducing diets—often with disastrous results.

There is always the possibility that one may omit calcium-bearing foods and thus impair the

"IRIUM Won Us!" Say New Pepsodent Users

Irium contained in BOTH Pepsodent Tooth Powder and Pepsodent Tooth Paste

Millions of people—many of whom have long suffered the embarrassment of dull, surface-stained teeth—are now enthusiastically applauding—and regularly using—Pepsodent containing Irium! These millions have learned how wonderful Irium helps Pepsodent better to brush teeth, or leave out foods rich in iron and copper and interfere with the formation of the hemoglobin or red pigment in the blood

One of the most common and most serious errors is to omit all bread, potatoes and cereals, in the belief that carbohydrates are "fattening foods." Carbohydrates are required by the body in order to utilize the fats in the diet, and when reducing, they are also necessary to burn up excess fatty tissue.

Just as fire cannot burn without air, fat cannot be utilized in the body without the presence of starch or sugar. When the diet contains insufficient carbohydrates, fat burns incompletely, resulting in the dangerous acetone type of acidosis.

Counting Calories the Easy Way to Reduce

The one safe, sure and scientific method of getting rid of surplus weight and at the same time maintaining top health—is to consume a diet that is balanced in every respect, but to count your calories at every meal, making certain that you consume fewer calories each day than your body requires for its normal energy expenditure.

I will gladly send to every reader of this newspaper, a copy of my reducing bulletin. This includes a chart showing the caloric value of all the commonly used foods—plus a week's sample reducing menus. By following this scientific plan for weight reduction, you can easily lose from one to two pounds weekly. A more rapid reduction is not advisable. At that rate, you can lose from six to eight pounds in the course of a month—twenty-four pounds at the end of three months. That is a lot of weight to lose and will make a vast difference in your appearance and in the enthusiasm with which you greet your daily tasks.

The Film Stars' Method

This simple and scientific method of controlling the weight is the one used by film stars in Hollywood. It is essential that they keep slim and practically every important film player has a clause in her contract calling for a cancellation if she permits her weight to increase beyond a certain point. But at the same time, film stars must safeguard their health, for their work is the most strenuous of occupations!

Counting Calories Is Fun

In Hollywood they make a game of counting calories. You, too, will find it amusing, as well as beneficial to health and looks. And you will be rewarded by noting a drop in weight every time you step on the scales.

If Your Weight Is Normal Keep It That Way

It has been determined that the ideal weight—that is the weight that best promotes health and

Washington Digest

Topics Interpreted
L. L. BRUCKART
WASHINGTON, D. C.

—The most important story in Washington and throughout the country now is the use of relief funds for political purposes. It is not only the most important at this time, but has become the most important to come. This is so because of the amount of money involved and the number of votes that will be influenced by that use. The stakes are so great. The stakes are so great that the unscrupulous are going for them to the limit of their capacity. I think that the corruption of the Harding administration with its shameful oil policy was more sensational, but it was more than the scandalous earlier malfeasance of the Harding oil affair, there was 5 per cent as much involved. Few, if any, votes of citizens were at stake; no votes of persons who were at fault of their own found destitute.

The late Thomas Walsh, Democratic senator, who in the earnest fight to purge the crooks at that time, the senate again notice of the conditions, help but wonder whether it would be the same high-type of ship displayed, the same shown by some Republican senator. For the country, I hope that no one will be left unturned by the investigation which, though delayed and after an irritation from the country, was ordered by the atorial ears must have burned to a crisp. Anyway, it brought action and for that the country ought to be thankful.

It might be well to review the senate action when it ran away from an honest job on the relief appropriation. First, there was the amendment by Senator Hatch, Democrat, New Mexico, which was to prevent use of relief funds for political purposes by the simple expedient of dismissal for the official who had control over such funds; second, there was the amendment by Senator Lodge, Massachusetts Republican, which would have required a distribution of the relief funds on the basis of the number of unemployed in each state and which, thereby, would have prevented use of vast sums in some states where the political battle might be going against the candidate with a New Deal blessing, whether the opponent be an old line Democrat or a Republican; third, there was the amendment by Senator Rush Holt, Democrat, of West Virginia, which merely proposed to make all federal relief officials responsive to civil service laws insofar as political activity was concerned; and fourth, there was the amendment by Senator Austin, Republican, Vermont, which would have made it unlawful for any person whose compensation comes from relief funds to solicit, or authorize the solicitation of, funds as contributions to any political party.

Well, as I said, the senate ran away from them and it seems to me that any senator who voted against those amendments was a pretty difficult job to explain that vote. As much as I admire Senator Barkley, the basis of his argument was so sour that it smelled to high heaven. The Kentuckian told the senate that the amendments would destroy senators and give all of the political power into the hands of state political machines which could use that power against senators seeking reelection. Senator Barkley is being challenged for renomination in his state and, I suppose, the matter strikes right close home with him.

Whether senators who voted against those amendments so intended or not, what they have done, when the picture is examined in an unbiased fashion, is to put the whole Roosevelt administration in a ridiculous position. It was their action which makes the record show that the whole administration is willing to let politics run riot in relief; it is against a fair and equitable allocation of money among the states in accordance with the number of unemployed who must be fed.

As to the phase of conditions "back home," the word seeps through to Washington that a good many persons who are seeking house or senate nominations against New Deal aspirants are finding strong WPA organizations against them and in favor of the New Deal candidate. And the full import of that strength comes to mind quickly when one thinks what a hungry person will give up in order to have food.

Senator Tydings of Maryland is the sponsor of the move to clean up the mess in relief. Of course, Senator Tydings, while a staunch Democrat, seldom has done anything to cause the New Dealers happiness; on the contrary, he was marked for "liquidation" long, long ago. It is much better that an outstanding Democrat should have proposed the investigation than to have had the proposal come from a Republican. Had a Republican introduced the resolution, the thing would have been called political, purely. But it would have been a move calculated to demonstrate the genuineness of the New Deal if some Roosevelt 100 per center would have brought up the proposition.

There is a great opportunity for this new senate committee to serve the country well. It can, and should, go into every report its investigators obtain to learn to what extent taxpayers' money is being employed to influence elections. It has an outstanding piece upon which to work, at the very start. Did not Mr. Hopkins horn into the Iowa primary? And everywhere there was the question whether the WPA and other relief workers in Iowa would not renege the Hopkins announcement in behalf of Mr. Wearin as an "order" for them to support the same man.

But more important than Mr. Hopkins, this investigation—if it is seriously made—can point the tremendous fallacy and danger of relief being administered from Washington instead of from the states and the counties where the money is spent. If the country is made fully aware of true conditions, I believe there will be changes in the relief methods that will allow more than 60 or 70 cents out of each dollar expended to be used for food and clothing as is the case now.

Lesson for July 3

A CHOICE OF LOYALTIES

LESSON TEXT—Joshua 1:2-6; 24:14-21
GOLDEN TEXT—As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord. Joshua 24:15 PRIMARY TOPIC—Choosing Sides.
JUNIOR TOPIC—A Loyal Leader.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Choice of Loyalties.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Man's Highest Allegiance.

"Lives of great men all remind us," according to the poet, that we too may make our lives sublime, and thus leave our footprints in the shifting sands of time. The study of biography is interesting, instructive, and often challenging. When we enter the field of Bible biography we bring into consideration an additional and fundamental factor, namely, the power and grace of God working in and through a surrendered life. All strength of character and ability is a gift of God, but its glory is largely veiled and its usefulness definitely limited, if not actually perverted, because there is no recognition of the foundation of true greatness, which is faith in and loyalty to God.

During the next three months we are to share in the study of the life stories of great men and women which will not only stimulate ambitions, but which also reveal what God can do through those who are ready to follow Him.

Moses, God's great leader for Israel, having brought them out of the land of bondage and through the terrible wilderness, is about to leave them. God's workman is about to die, but His work is to go on. God is not taken by surprise.

I. A Prepared Man Takes Command (1:3-6).

"Moses is dead; now therefore arise." Life is like that. "The king is dead; long live the king," is the cry of those who live under monarchies, as one ruler dies and his successor takes over the throne. Until that day when there shall be "time no longer," men must put away their sorrow and go on. Three words characterize the commission.

1. Promise (vv. 2-4). God gave the land to Israel. Every place that Joshua planted his foot upon was to be his possession, even as God has promised Moses. A river lay between; there were walled and armed cities to be taken; there were even giants in the land, but God promised it to Joshua; and he took it by faith.

God has given us many promises, too. If we are fearful, poverty-stricken, powerless Christians, it is because we do not believe God.

2. Power (v. 5). No man is able to stand against God's servant who is doing God's will, in God's way, in God's time. It was true of Joshua; it is true today. Men set up their opposition to God's plan and program with the assumed belief that because they have position, power, or money, they can readily crush the poor little band of Christian workers. Russia tried it. They even "abolished" God. But religion thrives in Russia, secretly perhaps, but none the less sincerely and successfully.

3. Courage (v. 6). To serve God means to be assured of His help. Faith lays hold of that fact and the whole man becomes courageous.

II. An Experienced Man Gives Counsel (24:14-21).

More than two decades have passed since the appointment of Joshua to lead Israel. God has fulfilled every promise. Israel is in the Promised Land. Before the aged leader dies he calls the leaders of his people together to urge them to continue in the way of faith and loyalty to God. This he does by:

1. Example (v. 15). "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." No man can honestly and effectively call others to devotion to the Lord unless he sets them an example.

2. Instruction (vv. 16-19). Remembering God's dealings with them, the people declare their determination to serve the Lord. They spoke rather glibly. Joshua instructs them. God is not interested in lip service. He does not need them so much as they need Him. He does not look upon their confession of Him, if they continue to live in sin.

3. Warning (v. 20). God will visit His judgment on His people if they forsake Him and turn away—such is Joshua's warning. We who look back to the history of Israel know that they did forsake Him, and that the judgment of God is still upon them. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Gal. 6:7) is God's warning through Paul to the Christian.

Farmers Of County To Receive Electric Service

CONSTRUCTION OF REA LINES NOW UNDER WAY IN HANCOCK COUNTY

Construction of rural electric lines in Hancock County began July 5th when the contractor, Sandberg & Johnston moved crews and construction equipment into the county to begin work. The material has already arrived and poles, wire, transformers and other equipment are on the way from many parts of the country. Approximately 120 miles of electric line will be built with the money that the Rural Electrification Administration has made available to the Hancock County Rural Electric Cooperative. Another application was made recently for a second allotment to build approximately 200 additional miles. No farms may be served unless they become members of the Cooperative and the membership fee is $5.00.

Many questions have come up concerning wiring, lighting and other problems that you need to know in getting ready to use electricity. In any case of this kind get in touch with the REA office in Garner, Iowa and someone qualified to do so will discuss these questions with you.

It is most important that those farms located along the lines to be built under the first allotment complete their wiring in the next 30 days. REA requires that at least 50 per cent of the farms be ready to receive service when the lines are ready to be energized. It is essential, therefore, that you arrange to do this immediately or you and your neighbors will delay enjoying the use of electricity at the first opportunity.

The road bed will be straightened at the bridge approach to eliminate danger.

Other road work, including grading and graveling is also slated for Avery township.

HIGHER SUMMER PRICES ARE FORECAST FOR HOGS

But Considerably Lower Prices Are Probable for Next Winter, Survey Indicates

Higher hog prices this summer and considerably lower prices next winter are seen by Iowa State College agricultural economists in light of June pig survey of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. The survey was released last week and indicated a 13-percent increase in the number of hogs saved between Dec. 1, 1937 and June 1, 1938, as compared with the same period of the previous year. It also showed the number of hogs 6 months old and over on farms June 1 to be about the same as a year earlier.

The increase in the number of pigs saved was the result both of more sows farrowing and of an increase in the number of pigs saved per litter. A new record average size of litter was reported this year. The previous record was in 1937. The average number of pigs saved per litter for the country was 6.37 and for the Corn Belt, 6.55.

The sharp advance in hog production this spring means that about nine hogs will be marketed in the October-March period of 1938-39 for every eight marketed in that period of the last year. This increase in supply, the State College economists said, will cause the prices to drop well below the last year's prices. Demand conditions may improve some between now and next winter but probably not enough to prevent much lower prices.

Total supplies of hog products during the rest of the summer may be no larger and possibly even smaller than supplies a year ago, if the June pig survey indications are correct, the economists said. The number of hogs 6 months of age an older on farms June 1 was estimated to be the same as last year. If the number of sows to farrow in the last half of the year are subtracted this leaves the number of market hogs to be sold somewhat smaller than the number sold last summer. The total supply of large and pork in cold storage is considerably smaller than it was a year ago.

Even though demand conditions are unfavorable, hog prices may rise considerably during the summer in view of this supply situation the economists said. Prices will not go nearly as high as they did last summer when business activity was much better and incomes of city consumers much higher.

The pig survey indicated the number of sows to farrow in the last half of 1938 would be about 9 percent greater than the number that farrowed in the same period of 1937. If the number of pigs per litter is about average, this will mean a total increase of 12 percent in the number of pigs saved in 1938 over 1937. This includes the spring crop.

For the whole hog marketing year, October 1938 to September 1939, this means a 10 to 15 percent increase in hog marketings, the economists said.

KLEMMME TO HAVE CIRCUS ON THURSDAY, JULY 14

Local Merchants Cooperating With Circus In Putting On Show

The Conroy Bros. Show, a motorized circus which was in Klemme in 1934, will again appear here under canvas on Thursday, July 14th, giving an evening performance only. The tent will be located in the vacant lot one block north of Thada's store.

A number of local merchants are cooperating with the circus this year by purchasing circus tickets and giving them out to their customers. A merchant ticket and 20c, plus 1c tax, admits an adult, while a merchant ticket and 10c admits any child, and gives both adults and children a good seat where they may see every act of the show.

Come to Klemme and do your trading; secure a merchant ticket and save 20c on every ticket. See the ad in this issue of the Times for the names of those merchants who have tickets.

This season the Conroy Bros. claim, that for the size of their show they have one of the best equipped, up-to-date shows on the road. They make this territory every four years and always show to a packed tent. The main reason for their large attendance is that they keep their admission price within reach of everyone and give a clean show that every member of the family will enjoy.

CAR WRECKED, DRIVER ESCAPES UNINJURED

Cars driven by Frank Pringnitz and Howard Kester collided at an intersection two miles south and three miles west of Klemme near the Tanner school at about ten o'clock Monday morning, July 4th.

The Kester car was rolled over a couple of times and was badly wrecked. All the windows were broken, the body caved in, smashed and twisted into a mass of wreckage. Howard Kester, farm hand from near Kanawha, the only occupant, escaped with but slight bruises.

The Pringnitz car was not badly damaged. A broken bumper, bent fender and radiator grill was about the extent of the damage and the occupants of the Pringnitz car were not injured.

Expect but little and you will have few disappointments.

Iowa to Get Famous Pioneer Locomotives

Old Locomotive No. 36 used in the 1880's.

Des Moines, Ia., Special:—The nation's leading railroads are cooperating with the Iowa Territorial Centennial committee in assembling an unusual exhibit of pioneer locomotives, mail cars, coaches and early methods of transportation to be displayed at the Iowa Centennial State Fair, Aug. 26 to Sept. 2.

Special tracks will be run into the state fair grounds to display the old time locomotives and trains side by side with the newest models of streamlined trains now in use.

Included in the equipment promised this week by railroad leaders is the following: Engine No. 36, used on the western lines of the Burlington in the 1880's. The first railroad mail car in which U. S. mail was sorted in transit, complete with wood burning stove, sand filled cuspidor, old fashioned water cooler and other pioneer equipment.

Rock Island "saddle back" engine No. 3, used by the road in 1885—to be displayed side-by-side with engine No. 5000, one of the modern super power oil burning locomotives used to draw present day high speed trains.

Other railroads are now looking through their old equipment and among their museum pieces for selections for the exhibit. The exhibit will be open to the public throughout the Centennial State Fair from Aug. 26 through Sept. 2.

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. I planted my full allotment of corn, which was 60 acres. We had a flood, and 20 acres washed out. Since it was too late to plant corn, I planted this land to soybeans and expect to harvest the beans for grain. Will I lose part of my corn payment because I do not have 80 percent of my corn allotment in corn?

A. No. Your reporter should show that this land had been planted to corn and the reason that you do not have 80 percent of your allotment classified as corn is that flood washed part of it out. In that case you would receive your corn payment upon the full corn allotment.

Q. How is Hegari classified?

A. Since Hegari is a grain sorghum it would be classified as a depleting crop even though it is cut for fodder.

Q. I have not raised any wheat in 1936, 1937 and 1938. I should like very much to have a wheat allotment for 1939. What must I do to get one?

A. You should tell the farm reporter when he visits your farm checking the performance for 1938, that you wish to have a wheat allotment for 1939. Also give him the number of acres of allotment which you desire.

Q. My cattle do not keep the oats down that I am pasturing, and considerable grain will form. Will it still be non-depleting even though I pasture these oats after they are ripe?

A. Oats are classified as depleting whenever they mature grain even though they might have been pastured.

Q. If I desire to avail myself of federal crop insurance, how and when can I make application?

A. Federal crop insurance is available in 1938 on wheat only, and the premium must be paid in 1938 insuring the 1939 crop. The agricultural conservation committees are administrators of this program in the county, and with them there is a county crop insurance supervisor. All wheat growers in the counties will be given a chance by either personal contact or by postal communication to participate in this insurance program.

Q. Is it correct that I can pay in wheat or cash the amount of my crop insurance premium? If I pay a premium on a number of acres greater than I can plant under the AAA program will I lose that part of my premium?

A. The answer is yes to the first question and no to the second. If you would make application and pay the premium on 40 acres of wheat and later it was planted under the AAA program, this 10 acres of premium paid would not be lost to you, but upon your application the total amount of excess premium would be returned.

About 75 delegates and several visitors attended. A nominating committee composed of A. C. Scores Die in Worst Rail Wreck in Years

In the nation's worst railroad tragedy in years, approximately 40 passengers were killed when the Milwaukee road's crack "Olympian" train plunged into the flood waters of Custer creek near Miles City, Mont. A midnight "flash flood" carried away the trestle spanning the creek and the train plunged into the raging waters. These two coaches bore many of the passengers who lost their lives.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON. — The record of the Seventy-fifth congress has been fully written and a backward look of a few weeks gives one the impression there never was a congress like it. Certainly, I can say without equivocation that I have never seen like it in the 20 years I have served as a Washington reporter.

The Seventy-fifth has been almost entirely in session since January. There were two regular sessions—ones—and there was a long extraordinary session November 15 which succeeded completely in one task only, the matter of the traveling expenses which were voted the members when they come to Washington. They got money in a hurry even though 90 days of actual meetings were insufficient for any other legislative act.

For a serious review of the Seventy-fifth, let us set down these facts: it spent more money than any other congress in peacetime history. That is, it voted more appropriations. It spent more time than nearly any other congress in the history of the United States. (For the latter condition, I am sure we might be thankful for the present congress, which is now and always has been a record of laws on our statute books.)

There has never been a congress, before or otherwise, which engaged in so many political acrobatics. The start of the first session was completely under President Roosevelt's domination. There was the fight over enlargement of the Supreme court and the senate into full cry against the President. There was another stage when the house and senate both were used in the rawhide on the executive branch. Then, the other day, the adjournment they voted a gift of gold for presidential pardoning and followed that by overruling a veto.

Consider this action if you want to see something that really represents perfection in backward somersaults. Late last year, congress rejected the wage and hour bill and then off the so-called anti-lynch bill with a fervor that was good news. It rejected the President's plan for reorganization of the government and did it quite vigorously. It found a new spring board, jumped off into passage of a wage and hour bill for the nation which the President wanted very much as a sop to labor. It had in the meantime passed a tax bill so contrary to the President's wishes as to be objectionable to his theories of taxation that he refused to sign it. True, it became a law, but it was the first time Mr. Roosevelt allowed an act of congress to be passed without either his signature or his veto.

These things might be considered as representing a vast amount of independence except that, as the bill approached adjournment, members took Mr. Roosevelt's proposal for appropriation of another $5,000,000,000 for lending and spending it. They had been doing that before, but the significant thing was that the members, faced with a wide open opportunity, refused to free themselves from presidential domination. It will be remembered how four amendments were offered to the spending-lending bill, each designed to prevent the relief funds in politics—those amendments were defeated in the senate. They took those amendments in the very midst of trades mixing relief and politics and attempts of the administration to unfriendly Democratic senators representatives in the party priorities. Indeed, it seems to me, they actually voted the President's powers with which to force Deal opponents into line on his programs.

As a result of all of the flow of money authorized in the Seventy-fifth congress, it seems a fair guess to say that the national debt by the end of June, next year, will approximate $47,000,000,000. That will represent an increase in the national debt of 27 billions in six years. It is an increase in the debt that exceeds the World War debt itself. The deficit for the year which has ended was disastrously large—a year in which there had been no announcements by Mr. Roosevelt and others that the budget would be balanced. In view of the appropriations made in the last session, I think that a $5,000,000,000 deficit in the fiscal year that ends June 30, 1939, is a fair prediction. It is the end in sight. Have you noted how little talk there was of the waning days of the last session of congress about any plan to balance the budget? Folks, congress gave it a thought! It was upon getting money voted because business conditions were bad there were too many votes that could be had for a little relief job or a little relief check. That's something which congress can't very well deny, even though the members hide behind the President's ample frame by saying that Mr. Roosevelt asked for the money.

With respect to the nation's financial condition, it seems to me it is high time to be worried. Congress and the administration ought to be worried until there are deep creases in their collective brow. And, there are some who are worried, men like Sen. Carter Glass, the Virginia Democrat, who knows something about finances since he was once secretary of the treasury. Senator Glass appears to fear a collapse is approaching.

As an indication of how far into the depths the nation has fallen financially, attention may be directed at several minor circumstances which taken singly mean little but which taken collectively bulk large. The Seventy-fifth congress added something like 5,300 new names to the pension rolls. While these names were being added through passage of pension bills in a steady stream, new bureaus and the consequent bundle of new jobs were being created by congress at the request of the President, or sometimes just because a senator or a representative had the idea. Those jobs, of course, carry salary checks. They are jobs scattered throughout the country in many instances—field offices, they are designated. It goes without saying that each office had to be fully staffed, and so there were clerks hired here and there. Most of the new jobs were not placed under civil service by the laws which congress enacted, and so they constituted political plums to be picked when most needed in a campaign year.

And no review of the Seventy-fifth congress ought to omit an item that seldom has been noted in the history of earlier congresses. The representatives and senators met so many times and talked so much when in session that a month ago they had to increase the appropriation for publishing the Congressional Record, the official "newspaper" of proceedings in congress. The appropriation—a mere drop of water in the vast sea of expenditures, being only $400,000—was necessary, the government printing office reported because the last session of the Seventy-fifth congress used up about 10,000 more pages than had been estimated as needed for the session. One really is not being facetious or humorous at all in saying that $400,000 really has "gone with the wind."

So, we have seen a congress, in which the President in his 1936 election achieved a stupendous majority, look to that President for guidance in a most subservient fashion. We have watched it seek his innermost thoughts and strive to execute his ideas. None thought, I believe, that there was ever a possibility of a revolt. Yet, it did revolt. It fought back and won on a number of occasions, only to turn again to him in the final hours when an election is in the offing and where scores of members believed that only the President's personal popularity would carry them through. Unique is hardly the word to describe the Seventy-fifth. Personally, I think the Seventy-fifth probably passed out of existence with a record that is not equalled for slime, cowardice and petty politics.

And, thus, the members go into their biennial dance to attract votes. They have started their circuses already in many contested areas; some primary battles already are behind us, and others lie only a few short weeks ahead. Political fences are awaiting new posts and new promises have to be made. It will be a funny story if and when it ever can be pieced together, which, of course, it never will.

We, here in Washington, have listened to the demagoguery almost two solid years. You folks out there can have them for awhile. I hope the office-seekers tell the truth about their jobs in Washington. I sometimes think it would be a vote-getting program for a candidate for the house or the senate to go out and tell exactly what has been done—how little worthwhile, I mean. And then to follow that with a declaration that he was going to go back, if re-elected, and see to it that a real service for the nation is performed. Wouldn't that be refreshing?

Position of Windows

In planning a home the position of windows is something that deserves very serious consideration. The location of the aperture is as important as its size. The best light comes from the top of the window and is thrown farther back in the room and increases the reflected light of the room. In terms of ventilation value the window that is tilting serves best, as the hot air rises and is therefore more readily carried off.

Molten Interior of Earth Theory Now Revived by Science

Washington. — Volcanoes' roots may go down to a molten earth-interior after all, despite the disrepute into which that theory, once universally held, has fallen during recent years. A picture of the roots of volcanoes, presenting the old theory in more acceptable modern form, was offered before the meeting here of the American Geophysical union by Prof. Reginald A. Daly of Harvard university.

Professor Daly likened the crust of the earth to a wrinkled layer of solid paraffin floating on an interior of melted paraffin. The actual materials of the earth's crust and deeper layers are, of course, stony. Solid stone floats on the molten stone. Connecting masses between the volcanoes and the molten interior, Doctor Daly called by a new name, "abyssoliths," meaning bottomless stones. An abyssolith carries to the surface molten rock material, with steam and other gases under great pressure. These gases are the real explosives that supply motive power to volcanoes, he said. When the abyssolith's supply of them is spent the volcano "goes out."

The molten interior of the earth is, of course, not to be thought of as a liquid sloshing around like water in a jug. If it were at the surface, it might be liquid; the material is hot enough so that at least some of it would flow freely. But buried at great depths as it is, the molten interior mass is under such terrific pressure that it is held to a stony rigidity. In terms of the surface the interior can be stated only as a paradox: molten, yet stiff.

Volcanoes in a Series.

Volcanoes of the Hawaiian islands are in a connected series, so that the behavior of any one of them may affect the others, stated Dr. T. A. Jaggar, the government volcanologist who has lived on the rim of Kilauea crater for more than a quarter of a century.

There is a kind of compensatory movement of lavas in the volcanoes, he has watched, Doctor Jaggar told his audience. When it falls under one of them it usually rises in another. Persistent or repeated swelling and overflowing of such a vast spring of lava builds a dome-shaped crater; persistent sinking permits the surface layers to break and crash down, forming an enormous pit.

Steam jets, or fumaroles, warn of coming eruptions in the case of many volcanoes, Dr. E. G. Zies of the Carnegie Institution of Washington pointed out. Not all volcanoes have these danger signals, but on some of them the fumarolic activity preceding eruptions are characteristic. Doctor Zies has made a special study of this phenomenon at Merapi volcano in Java.

Old Greek Bronze Shop Is Unearthed at Olympia

Berlin.—Bronze helmets and statuettes have been unearthed by German archaeologists exploring ruins of an old Greek bronze foundry at Olympia.

The ruins have yielded ovens, retorts and moulds used by the Greeks, and from these the technique which made the Greeks the greatest of bronze founders can be investigated.

The Greeks located their workshop in the bed of an ancient rivulet which had filled up with sand, the archaeologists explain. From this sand were formed the moulds for holding the molten bronze. In their technique, the Greeks were adopting early the Egyptian method of hollow castings in sand, and constructing bronze parts by assembling separate parts and hammering them together.

Deaf Patients Aided by Thyroxine Injections

Atlantic City, N. J.—The miracle of making the deaf hear has been at least partially wrought by injections into the ear of thyroxine, hormone secreted by the thyroid gland. Results of this method of treatment were reported by Dr. Max A. Goldstein of St. Louis, Mo., at the meeting here of the American Laryngological, Rhinological and Otolaryngological association.

The patients were suffering from the chronic hereditary type of deafness known as otosclerosis. In this condition spongy bone forms in the capsule of the labyrinth of the ear. Doctor Goldstein injected the thyroxine into the middle ear. Improvement in hearing ranged from 35 to 50 per cent.

Folsom Men Ousted as Oldest Americans by Other Primitives

Los Angeles, Calif.—Discovery of strong evidence that America had two prehistoric waves of pioneers before the famous Folsom hunters arrived on our shores is reported here by the Southwest museum.

The discovery is pronounced "of major importance to American archeology." It is as surprising an addition to our prehistory as if two boats earlier than the Mayflower had been found bearing colonists to New England shores in our historic era.

A joint expedition of Carnegie Institution of Washington and Southwest museum, led by M. R. Harrington of the latter institution, unearthed stone relics of the long departed and long-lost Americans. Investigating the shore of a brackish pond in Lake county, California, where C. C. Post of Berkeley had found spearheads of one of the oldest cultures of America, the archeologists found brand-new chapters of prehistory opening before them.

The surface layer, turned topsyturvy by recent plowing, contained spear heads, knives, drills, and scrapers typical of the Folsom hunters. With such implements, Folsom men killed the mammoth and giant bison and prepared the kill for food and clothing. Seven to twelve thousand years ago is the loosely estimated antiquity of this Folsom era.

May Date to 13000 B. C.

With Folsom man's handiwork the archeologists found quite different stone spearheads and other implements. These different tools had recently been turning up at Lake Mohave and another western site, leaving archeologists doubtful as to whether they had found people older than the Folsom hunters, or not. Now the mystery is believed solved, since digging into the Lake county site revealed the Mohave type of tool in a camp deposit definitely below the Folsom tools—and therefore older than the Folsom tools.

There may have been not merely one but two kinds of primitive pioneers inhabiting America in those pre-Folsom days, at the same time. For Mr. Harrington reports finding a new type of spearhead, which he calls the Borax Lake type, which was found buried at about the same levels as the Lake Mohave tools.

Most surprising of all was the discovery that below all these relics lay still older weapons, made by people "as yet entirely unknown quantities in American archeology." These dawn men of America made crude and coarse stone implements, described by the archeologists as mainly large scrapers and hand axes which they clutched in the fist, using no handle.

Finding the deep levels of the site thus undisturbed after thousands of years convinced Mr. Harrington that these unknown ancients lived about 13000 B. C., or perhaps earlier.

Man Doesn't Face Life Squarely, Says Scientist

New Haven.—Man never faces life exactly squarely; he presents what a photographer would call a three-quarter view, or a bias front, and he makes his escape obliquely from unpleasant situations.

This picture of human physiological development was drawn by Dr. Arnold Gesell, director of Yale university's clinic of child development, from a study of motion pictures of the postures of human infants.

Contrary to what has been previously taught, the very young human baby favors a one-sided posture which scientists have believed was confined to lower animals, Doctor Gesell found. The young infant characteristically lies with head turned to one side, the arm on that side extended, and the arm on the other side doubled up.

Such posture may have its part in the child's development, aiding in the fixing of the eyes on the outstretched hand and later eye-hand co-ordination, Doctor Gesell believes. It would also tend to prevent suffocation of the infant and serve other purposes for survival and growth.

When the baby is twenty-four weeks old, this one-sidedness becomes submerged in the tendency to move both hands and arms together, but is never completely lost.

Original Coyote Lived Over Million Years Ago

New Haven, Conn.—The great-granddaddy of all coyotes has been dug up in Texas by a geological research team, Mr. and Mrs. C. Stuart Johnston of Canyon, Texas. Mr. Johnston describes the new species, based on three well-preserved skulls, in the American Journal of Science, published here.

The ancient coyote lived something over a million years ago, before the coming of the great Ice age. He was a more slenderly built animal than the modern coyote, but had a strong lower jaw. He has been given the scientific name, Canis lepophagus, which means rabbit-eating dog.

Star Dust

★ Goofy Comedies
★ 'The Sheik' Is Funny
★ Restless Holiday
—By Virginia Vale—

IT LOOKS more and more as if those goofy comedies were on the wane. First Carole Lombard said she'd have no more of them. Now Claudette Colbert, who helped to start the cycle with "It Happened One Night," has balked.

It was planned that she would do "Are Husbands Necessary?" when she returned from that European jaunt, but instead she'll go to work in "Midnight," which is romantic and dramatic and everything but goofy.

Speaking of "It Happened One Night," it was revived recently in New York, and a lot of people who'd heard about how funny it was but had missed it the first time round had a chance to see it. And the addicts who went to it over and over when it was first released found it just as funny as ever.

The revival of Valentino's "The Sheik," seems to have been ill-advised. Any picture that old is bound to look funny nowadays. And the generation of movie-goers that has grown up since the days of Valentino just couldn't understand why he had been such a world-beater. Some of them roared with laughter. They thought Agnes Ayres, the heroine, a bit too fat—though in her day she was considered streamlined! However, no matter what the young folks thought of that picture and the other Valentino revival, "The Son of the Sheik," they brought mobs to the theaters and money to the box offices.

It looks as if George Arliss had been tempted into returning to Hollywood, thanks to Samuel Goldwyn. Goldwyn has a picture called "The Exiles" on the fire, based on the stories of the many famous men who have had to leave their homes in Europe because of political troubles. Arliss would play the role of a distinguished scientist.

Warner Brothers will, at last, screen "The Miracle," with Bette Davis in the coveted role of the Nun. Ever since it was so successful as a dramatic spectacle—in London in 1911 and in New York in 1924—there has been talk of doing it for the screen. Now, with Max Reinhardt, its original producer, available, they are ready to start.

When Bob Burns ducked away from Hollywood for a rest, preparatory to taking over the Bing Crosby radio program for the summer, he didn't do so well in choosing a spot to rest in. He and his wife went to New York, but were so besieged by people that they left and went to Buffalo—he wanted to show her Niagara falls. And the public caught up with them again. He might try wearing a mask, if he really wants to rest!

Margaret Tallichet, a comparative newcomer to the screen, will be Ramon Novarro's leading woman in "As You Are." When and if "Gone With the Wind" reaches the screen she will be seen as Kareen O'Hara, younger sister of Scarlett. Miss Tallichet tried the summer theaters in the East last year, as a way of getting much-needed experience.

ODDS AND ENDS—Nancy Carroll will be seen on the screen again in "There Goes My Heart" . . . Judy Garland has a wrenched shoulder, the result of an automobile accident . . . Bobby Brown won't have the kind of financial trouble that Jackie Coogan is having when he grows up; his parents have arranged to put his earnings into a trust fund, keeping $200 a month for themselves . . . Sigrid Gurie says her husband threatened to humiliate her by getting a job in a gas station . . . Lots of wives wouldn't see anything humiliating about that . . . Harold Lloyd's new picture, "Professor Unwired," will be released simultaneously at special showings in New York, London and Paris.

Lesson for July 10

CALEB: LIFE-TIME DEVOTION

LESSON TEXT—Joshua 14:6-15.
GOLDEN TEXT—Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it.—Numbers 13:30.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Brave Caleb.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Caleb the Brave.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Hero's Reward.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Courage for Difficult Tasks.

"We need to know more about good men who are occasionally great, and less about great men who are occasionally good," says the Lesson Commentary, in pointing out that Caleb is one of the characters about whom the Bible does not say much, but in every case the word is one revealing high and noble character. Consider such passages as Numbers 13:6, 30; 14:7-9, 24, 30; 26:65, as well as our lesson for today.

The background for our study of today, and in fact an integral part of the lesson itself, is the story of Caleb's courageous stand with Joshua when the spies returned from their visit to Canaan, which is related in Numbers 13. He was then a comparatively young man, but demonstrated by his every word and deed that he had from his youth learned to know and obey God.

Note first of all Caleb's

I. Perfect Obedience (vv. 6-8). "I wholly followed the Lord my God." Such a testimony from a man like Caleb is no idle boast, no effort to parade his faith and piety before others. In saying it he was repeating what God and Moses had both said about him. In his heart he knew it to be true.

It is God's will for each of His children that they should come to such a place of simple trust and complete obedience that in every circumstance of life they need know only one thing—God's will—and then in faith to go and do it. It is a life beautiful in its transparent simplicity and powerful in the strength of God Himself.

II. Promised Inheritance (v. 9).

"Surely the land whereon thy feet have trodden shall be thine inheritance." Such was the promise of God through Moses. Forty-five long years had elapsed, but down through this period of wilderness wanderings and the conflict in subduing Canaan the promise had lived in Caleb's heart. He knew it would be fulfilled, and he waited serenely for God's time.

Such also are the promises of God which keep the heart singing in our hours of trial and sorrow, which lighten the dark ways, which strengthen the heart of His children. Learn God's promises, cherish them in your heart, expect God to fulfill them.

III. Preserved Strength (vv. 10, 11).

"The Lord hath kept me alive . . . and I am . . . strong." Here was a man kept of God, in full vigor in his eighty-fifth year, "like a rock in a changeless sea, like a snow-capped peak in a change of cloud and storm and sun" (Meyer). No doubt there was what our forefathers liked to call "the longevity of the antediluvians," but even apart from that let us recognize that life and strength come from God, and that those who walk with God in holy living may count on Him for the renewed strength of Psalm 103:5.

An incidental, but extremely important, lesson, we should learn is that God has no age deadline. The church has frequently sinned against Him and against His faithful servants by "shelving them" for younger men, when they would have brought blessing to themselves and to the church by encouraging and using them. The writer of these lines is a young man, but he would speak here a word of loving admonition regarding his honored brethren who have gone on before to bear the brunt of the battle.

IV. Powerful Assurance (vv. 12-15).

"If . . . the Lord will be with me, then I shall be able." Caleb asked for no easy task. He was ready to go up against the giants of Hebron. Read Deuteronomy 3:11, and you will find that there were men in those days who needed thirteen-foot beds. But Caleb was not afraid. He counted not on his own strength, but on the power of God. It is significant that while the other sections of Canaan were only partially conquered Caleb brought his formidable adversaries entirely under control, so that "the land had rest from war" (v.15).

The spiritual application to our day is evident and appropriate. There are giants in the land in this year of our Lord 1938. Corruption—social and political—raises its brazen head. Drunkenness and vice leer at us with the impudent suggestion that we cannot control them. There are giants "within us"—greed, selfishness, love of ease, lust, passion, cruelty" (Blakie). Are we to do nothing about them? If we are to meet them in the strength of the flesh we might almost as well do nothing. But in the power of God, we are like Caleb—able. In His name we may take up a slogan of today, "Let's do something about it!" and really do it, for His glory.

Well, this column existed through one week without seeming to raise much of a hub-bub among my readers, if any. As long as nobody's toes are stepped on very hard the life of a columnist is more or less rosy.

I-S-A-S

I think it is time to do a little tooting for our town. In driving around in other nearby towns I see a lot of run-down houses that need repairs and especially paint. Such is not true in Klemme. As a rule nearly every piece of property is well kept and neat. There are only a very few houses in town in need of repair and paint

The owners of such places lack civic pride more than they lack the cash to tidy up their property. A few dollars spent for paint and repairs would do wonders.

I-S-A-S

Klemme has one of the nicest parks to be found any place in North Iowa. The park is well kept, the lawn is kept trimmed and the trees are beautiful. The park makes a nice place for children to play and is an ideal place for picnics. A number of people have used the park for picnics during the past few weeks. I might just throw in a gentle reminder: To those who use the park for a picnic paper and food stuff should not be left laying around. Clean up after the picnic and help keep the park clean.

I-S-A-S

When strangers come to Klemme for a visit they admire our park, our two beautiful churches, our well-kept residential district, and our impressive business district. I wonder why we always steer them away from our old school building? Can it be that it does not fit into the progressive picture of our little town?

I-S-A-S

A suggestion for the protection of the children in Klemme on Wednesday and Saturday nights was given to us by one of our business men the other evening. The more I think of the idea the better I like it. His suggestion was this: That each Wednesday and Saturday night a block should be roped off on Main Street before any cars arrived in town. He suggested that a rope be strung across from the drug store to the bank, and another one from Jacobs hardware store to the Wellemeyer store.

His idea was that this would keep the street clear and give the youngsters a place to run around in without the danger of being struck by a car. It would give the youngsters a fine play ground on band concert nights and on movie nights.

The plan would not be a hardship on the grocery stores as each one of the three can be reached by the alley or side for delivering eggs. The originator of the plan also states he has consulted a number of farmers as to what they think of the plan and he said they were for it.

We present the idea for what it might be worth.

I-S-A-S

A few weeks ago we heard many remark that the corn would never be "knee high by the 4th" this year. Well, we can quit worrying about it, because most of the corn in this vicinity was well above the knee mark. The hot spell the past week did wonders to make the corn grow.

I-S-A-S

Over at Thor, Iowa, a few years ago, a disastrous fire just about wrecked the town and as I recall it two blocks of the business district was wiped out completely.

The sad part of it was that the fire originated in the building in which the fire truck was housed. The fire destroyed their fire-fighting equipment and left them without means of combating the flames.

It would be a sad state of affairs if that should also happen in Klemme. The Klemme Fire Department has purchased a new truck and equipment and the outfit will cost close to three thousand dollars. There is no place to keep it except in the old town hall building, which is frame construction and would quickly burn.

Somehow or other, I hope that the new truck can be housed in a fireproof building. Perhaps a way can be worked out.

I-S-A-S

And so, Iowa celebrated its first "sane 4th," with no fire crackers or fire works, the sale and use of which is now illegal in the state of Iowa. You will recall that the last legislature passed a law against the sale of fireworks.

Tough on the kids, but the law will save many a hand and eye. In a few years the kids will forget all about the fire crackers.

Now of the legislature could do something about people getting killed in automobiles and prevent them from growing. . . what a really glorious 4th we would have.

America of Present Day.

Marks Back to W. Indies

It may seem illogical to say that America of today had its origin in the West Indies. But such is a fact, asserts a writer in the Chicago Tribune, and that is why many people visit the islands of the Caribbean.

It is easy to picture the buccaneers and their victims, and the wild debauchery in which the loot was spent. Those bearded pirates were the gunmen of their period and they didn't bother much about "Hands up!" or "Don't move or I'll shoot!" They began to shoot as soon as they got into range. Hundreds of millions of gold were collected by these freebooters, and much of it is buried somewhere between the tropic of Cancer and the equator.

Mention of the West Indies brings to mind a flood of recollections—pictures of Columbus, the discoverer; De Leon, who loved Porto Rico so much that he sought the fountain of youth so that he might grow young again to enjoy all the longer its beauties; De Soto, who built the old fort which stands in Havana, and who sleeps in the bottom of the Mississippi river, which he discovered; Cortez, who found a splendid civilization in Mexico and wrecked it for the sake of gold; Balboa, the stowaway, who discovered the Pacific ocean; Pizarro, who spent a dozen or more years in his efforts to reach Peru so that he might rob the Incas of their vast wealth; Morgan, who sacked and burned Panama after his men had obtained its treasures; Drake, the privateer, who was just a pirate with a new name; Raleigh, who popularized tobacco and the potato; Josephine, the little girl from Martinique who became the wife of Napoleon and thus the empress of France.

Panama Cities Founded Several Centuries Ago

Cristobal, Canal Zone, Atlantic port of entry to that strip of leased territory across the narrow part of the republic of Panama, is the gateway to a scene that dates back through the centuries. Panama City and Colon are ancient and colorful, and Cristobal and Balboa are modern and military.

Panama City and Colon are not outgrowths of the building of the canal. They are cities founded four centuries ago, the terminals of a paved causeway built to carry the unrecorded riches of the conquistadores, with a legend of pirates, buccaneers, and the freebooters of the Spanish Main. A kaleidoscope of nations, they owe their atmosphere to a commerce originating in the Fifteenth century. The parade of nations began with the Spaniards and negro slaves, Inca chiefs and native Indians, and was carried on by the English buccaneers, the French corsairs, the forty-niners, Hindus, Chinese, and Arabs. Descendants of these early merchants pass through the streets, displaying their wares in open shops that give the thoroughfares the atmosphere of an oriental bazaar.

Balboa and Cristobal contrast sharply with Panama City and Colon in all respects except natural tropic beauty. They are a result of the canal, with wharves, customs houses, drydocks, administration buildings, rows of houses and a note of military efficiency.

Fogs, Mists, Are Clouds
Fogs, or mists, are really clouds close to or in contact with the ground. The conditions necessary are the presence of dust and water vapor in the atmosphere and the falling of the temperature of the air below a certain point. When this happens each particle of dust receives a coating of moisture, and mist is formed. This is white. In its early stages mist easily dissolves if the temperature rises slightly. If there is smoke about, each drop of moisture acquires a covering of oily film. This hinders evaporation and also gives the mist, now fog, its dark color and unpleasant flavor." Extensive fogs also occur where currents of air of different temperatures meet. This, says London Answers Magazine, is the reason why the region around Newfoundland is the foggiest in the world. There the air warmed by the Gulf Stream meets the cold Labrador current.

First Color of French Flag
While it is not usual to associate red with the French monarchy, it was really the first color of the king's flag, called the oriflamme. It is only because red was also adopted by the English king that the French gave it up for blue. It was under the blue flag that Huguenots came to America first as loyal subjects of the king of France. However, the red flag was preserved on the galleys of the Mediterranean fleet where terrible suffering was endured by the unhappy men who could not understand the injustice of the king.

Spelling "Coconut"
The people of Trinidad spell coconut without an "a"—that is, cocunut. The original derivation comes from the Spanish word "coco," applied to a monkey's face, the three eyes on the nut giving it the appearance of a monkey's face, the lower eye seeming to resemble a mouth. The coconut tree, bare to within a few feet of the tassle-like top, is one of the most beautiful in the West Indies. The trade winds keep it always waving.

Get Your Pigs In Under The Wire

The price of hogs is comparatively high and the price of feed is very low which makes it all to the advantage of the feeder.

A representative of one of the large packing companies said a few days ago that the price of hogs would undoubtedly stay up very well until the heavy run of spring pigs started to come to market late this year, so in order to get in on the higher market it is necessary for the farmer to push his pigs along just as fast as possible and get them to market at the earliest date possible. In order to do this it is necessary to feed a well balanced concentrate such as Mor-Gain Pig Meal or Mor-Gain 40% Hog Supplement.

If corn is fed in self-feeders or kept before the pigs all the time with a liberal supply of either of these concentrates kept before them all the time these pigs should go to market at six months of age weighing from 200 to 225 pounds and if this is done they will undoubtedly sell for $2.00 to $3.00 per hundred more than hogs fed on corn alone which would not go to market until they were from nine to twelve months of age.

Many of our customers are using the 40% Hog Supplement as a concentrate to mix with home grown corn and oats. If this method is used, one sack of the Hog Supplement can be mixed with 200 pounds of ground corn and 200 pounds of ground oats which will give you a feed of about 16% in protein and is an ideal ration for feeding either as a slop feed or it may be fed dry through a self-feeder as a complete feed.

Town Of Wesley Takes Advantage Of Government Funds

The town of Wesley has secured a government grant of $9,000 and are making plans to build a new gymnasium for their school. They will submit to the voters soon a bond issue of $12,000 to complete the building.

A large number of Iowa towns and cities are taking advantage of the government grants of 45 percent and are making many public improvements and buildings.

PHEASANTS BEING SHIPPED

The first shipments of pheasants raised at the new game birdhatchery were shipped on June 22nd, reports the Game Department of the Conservation Commission. Six hundred birds comprised the first shipments, three hundred going to the Audubon County Conservation Committee and three hundred to the Plymouth County Conservation Committee. The birds were 14 days old when shipped and will be reared to adult stage then released to the wild on areas approved by the Commission.

CATFISH LEGAL JULY FIRST

Catfish again become legal fish on July 1st, according to the Iowa laws. The season for taking catfish opened in inland streams only, on May 1st and closed again on May 30th to permit undisturbed spawning during the month of June.

The catfish season opens in all waters on July 1st. Fifteen is the daily catch limit with 12 inches as the minimum length.

Many Kinds of Sponges, Suitable for All Uses

There are more than eighty varieties of usable sponges, and thousands of useless ones. The kind used in the bath is known as wool. Another sort, called velvet, is used to wash automobiles, and in Holland cows just before they are milked. The reef sponge is used in gas masks and in hospitals, and shipped in enormous quantities to Japan. Englishmen use this variety after shaving. The grass sponge is the cheapest grade. The hard head is used by tailors and potters, and the yellow sponge by painters.

Sponge fishermen locate their prey through a "water glass," which is an inverted bucket with glass bottom that smooths out the ripples when it is held on top of the water. The fishermen pull the sponges out of the sea with a pronged staff. When taken from the mud, the sponges are put in kraals, where they are kept until the flesh decomposes, when it is beaten out with sticks.

At Nassau the sponges are taken to storehouses, where they are sorted and graded, trimmed and pressed. Some are dyed and perfumed. When royal persons visit Nassau they are given rose-scented pink sponges.

There is a place in the Bahamas called the Mud, unromantically and libelously named, for the water is clear as crystal. It is from the Mud that the sponges come.

"Kitchen Cabinet" Made Up of Jackson's Friends

The name "kitchen cabinet" was applied by John Randolph, of Roanoke, to a small group of intimate friends of President Jackson. Although these men held no important offices at the time, notes a writer in the Indianapolis News, they seemed to influence the President's political actions more than did his official cabinet.

The moving spirit of the "kitchen cabinet" was Amos Kendall of Kentucky, who was fourth auditor of the treasury, although he later became postmaster general. Other members of this coterie were Gen. Duff Green, editor of the United States Telegraph, the administration organ at Washington; Maj. William B. Lewis of Tennessee, second auditor of the treasury; Isaac Hill, editor of the New Hampshire Patriot, and later Francis P. Blair, Sr., who was editor of the Globe, which in 1831 superseded the United States Telegraph as the administration organ at the capital.

It is said that when these men visited President Jackson they went through the back or kitchen door in order to avoid public notice. Randolph declared that this little coterie of intimate friends of the President decided the great affairs of state while the members of the official cabinet were asleep.

Aardvark, First Animal Mentioned in Dictionary

Like something out of a dipsoniac's dream is the aardvark. It is one of the strangest of extant animals—extraordinary in appearance, in structure and in habits. While not one of the animals most familiar to the average person, it enjoys, because of the spelling of its name, the unique distinction of being the first animal to be mentioned in the dictionary and its name is one of the first words of any kind to appear in lexicons. The name comes from the Dutch, means "earth pig," and refers to the creature's piglike snout and its habits. However, in spite of its snout and its smooth, fat body, the aardvark is quite unrelated to pigs. In fact, according to Dr. Wilford H. Osgood, chief curator of the Field Museum of Natural History department of zoology, the animal has been something of a puzzle to zoologists and anatomists who have undertaken to find a logical place for it in schemes of classification of animals.

Aardvarks are common throughout much of southern and eastern Africa south of the equator. They live in relatively open, semiarid country wherever there is an abundance of the termites or so-called "white ants," upon which they feed almost exclusively. Individual aardvarks reach weights up to about 150 pounds and appear always fat and well conditioned. For such a large heavy animal to exist upon tiny termites is rather remarkable and testifies to the abundance of such food in Africa.

Osmium, Iridium, Thulium of Platinum Metal Group

Discovered in 1803, osmium is a rare, blue-white to gray metallic element, difficult to fuse, not affected by ordinary acids and insoluble in aqua regia. It is the heaviest of the elements. A member of the group of "platinum metals," it forms an alloy with iridium, labeled osmiridium, which is used in making fountain pen points.

Like osmium, iridium is a rare metallic element, conspicuously heavy, states a writer in the Kansas City Star. Silvery-white, iridium was discovered in 1804. It is important commercially for its alloys, which are used for making standard weights and parts of scientific apparatus which must withstand the action of the atmosphere and other factors; in electrical apparatus for contact points and other parts required to resist high temperatures and active substances, such as chlorine.

Among later elements found to be present in the sun, thulium is extremely rare, occurring in Nature with other metals of the rare earth's group. It forms a number of compounds, the characteristic color of which is light green. Discovered in 1879 thulium has no commercial use.

Red Honey Produced

Even reddish-brown honey can be produced, Paul Griswold Hayes writes in an article in Nature. Logwood blossoms on the island of Dominica in the West Indies produce a singular tasting variety, but the color comes from the sap of the tree, that contains a coloring principle much used in dyeing. Most famous of the dark honey of Europe is that from the Scottish heather, with a cheaper type being derived from the English heather. In Southern Europe the favorite honey is probably the Roman, derived from the rosemary, and the Mt. Hymettus variety from the wild thyme of Greece. Although most ordinary honey crystallizes in six months after bottling, the white tueplo will remain liquid after 10 years. On the other hand, the blue-curl nectar granulates almost at once in the wax cells.

Monkey Business

"The Confusion in this City, occasioned by Counterfeit Copper English Halfpence amongst us, is almost inconceivable; for notwithstanding the large quantities of good Pence we have long had, there is now hardly any Sum offered, but there are Counterfeit Ones intermixed; and to such a Degree of Suspicion, is the Common People raised, that many good Pence, which have passed current perhaps for above 20 Years past are now refused."—From the New York Post Boy of December 3, 1753.

The Great Dipper

The great dipper only appears to revolve, owing to the revolution of the earth. It makes an apparent revolution every 24 hours, the same as the sun. It is visible throughout the entire night because it is within what is called the circle of perpetual apparition, or that part of the heavens which is always in sight to the observer. This circle enlarges as one travels from the equator, where it is nothing, to the pole, where it takes in the whole Northern Hemisphere.

Walnut in Victorian Era

During the Victorian era walnut was used almost exclusively in the construction of practical furnishings—dining room and bed room pieces especially—though handsomely carved whatnots; and other living room items, settees, small tables, occasional chairs, and massive hall chests were also fashioned of the light-toned wood.

HANCOCK COUNTY RESIDENTS INVITED TO INSPECT NEW REEVES PLANT

Everyone is invited to visit the plant July 10th where they will be welcomed by members of the Board of Directors and Project Superintendent of the Hancock County Rural Electric Cooperative. Visitors will be welcomed any time after 12 o'clock noon when guides will be on hand to show visitors through the plant.

MUST THEY GAMBLE?

Men Aren't the Only Devotees of This American Institution; Women Like It, Too!

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

She might have been hypnotized, but slot machines don't actually hypnotize people.

The girl with the little red hat tossed quarter after quarter into a mechanical pickpocket, drunk with her desire to win. If she had paused for a moment, if someone had taken pencil and paper to show her how slot machines work, how 80 cents out of every dollar goes to line somebody else's pocket—

But the girl in the little red hat was playing a hunch. She thought hunches always win because last week she won $5 on a horse called "Rainy Weather," having placed the bet in the middle of a thundershower.

Women will gamble, it seems, and if you think daddy is the only one who spends his paycheck at a bookie, take a look at the record!

Gambling, the law notwithstanding, has grown into an institution of the first water, filching millions of dollars a year from the pockets of those who can ill afford it. Some favor legalized lotteries on the theory that people will gamble anyway. They claim it offers the poor a chance to get rich, thereby making for less dissatisfaction. What they forget is that "small money is sucker money" in the gambler's parlance. Big winners in the betting racket are those who start with big stakes and can afford to lose.

Big Business in Bookies.

A two-minute tour around the country shows that bookmaking on horse races is thriving despite its illegal status. Chicago's city council set a precedent last winter by legalizing bookies to operate outside the race tracks provided they pay an annual license fee. But the state of Illinois clamped down on this scheme to fill Chicago's coffers, just as Ohio, Maryland, California and Michigan have rejected similar proposals in the past.

Several southern California cities recently decided to license bookies at fees ranging from $2,500 to $5,000. Then the appellate court stepped in and ruled the ordinances violated California's racing act. New Orleans is a bookmaker's paradise even though they operate illegally. In Louisville between 250 and 500 bookmakers work openly and in Miami, Fla., they operate at ease despite threats by the state.

But this is a story about gambling in general and women in particular. The story is more interesting because a few years ago there were social and moral taboos against gambling, while today Mother leaves Junior's buggy on the sidewalk while she walks into the corner bookie and places a bet on the fifth race at Suffolk Downs. Fortunately this situation isn't commonplace throughout the country. It's confined mostly to large cities and for laboratory purposes let's put New York under our microscope.

Here is a town where it was once unladylike to sit down on the floor and throw the dice.

Housework Is a Bore.

In this metropolis, where Friend Husband spends his days at the office it's often easy for the wife to become bored with housework, knitting and reading. To satisfy her desire for something new a huge gambling business has arisen, catering exclusively to women and making good money at it. A conservative estimate is that New York women invest half a billion dollars a year in gambling.

The "policy racket" or "numbers" game, a polite form of larceny responsible for the rise and downfall of many a big-time racketeer, is the New York woman's favorite form of gambling. This is true because you can invest any amount, from one cent to a hundred dollars. Wash women down in Harlem and go up and down. This situation has produced a queer type of woman customer. One wizened old lady arrives promptly each morning at a brokerage house and sits in silence until closing time, seldom trading.

Women are suckers for horse races. They play hunches, placing their money on a horse because they like his name or because he hasn't won a race for two years. There's no way of estimating how much money they bet, or what percentage of the total annual investment comes from them. But half the 300,000 daily calls coming into telephone rooms of dope sheets in New York are from women. If women are allowed only 10 per cent of the annual $350,000,000 total bet at New York tracks and bookies, it still amounts to $35,000,000, which isn't chicken feed.

Sometimes They Win.

Sweepstakes take millions out of the country every year and half of it is said to be paid by women. The figures for New York stand at $40,000,000 grand total per year. A favorite plan is for several women employed in the same factory to buy "shares" in a sweepstakes ticket.

Bridge, the genteel game of club women, has become a high-powered gambling business in New York and other cities. Sometimes the stakes are only a dime for the entire afternoon's play; sometimes a twentieth of a cent a point. Again, some women play for 25 cents a point but they must be "well heeled" before trying it.

New York is infested with bridge "sharpies," professional players who make their living gambling. Sometimes they sit in as partners to men (always poor bridge players, they say) who want to make an impression.

From bridge it's only a short jump to poker, a traditionally masculine game that is winning women followers in New York. "Poker urge, something like dope, and they go back night after night, satisfied if their $3.00 investment nets them a $2.00 bathroom scale.

Stock market speculation isn't exclusively a man's game in New York and there are those who claim it isn't speculation at all. But women are heavy customers along Wall Street—call it speculation or just plain "investment"—and many of them spend five hours a day in brokerage houses watching the ticker tape and the exchange boards.

The stock market is a big money game and most women gamblers are small players, being content merely to sit and watch the lines flats" are commercial institutions where the girls may gather of an afternoon. Then there's dice, mah jong and backgammon, besides such ill-mannered pastimes as rummy, pinochle, hearts and euchre.

Maybe the men taught them to gamble and after all it's probably no more sinful for women than men. But lady gamblers merely add to an already large population that spends its money recklessly and eventually gets into trouble. Maybe legalized lotteries are the answer because mankind has been gambling since Biblical days. It seems to be human nature.

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses

CALCIUM The Captain of the Minerals

Nationally Known Food Authority Explains
How to Include This Vital Food Element in the Daily Diet

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th Street, New York City.

A FEW years ago there was an earthquake in the Far West. When the tremors were over, the frightened people looked in dismay upon the damage that had been done. In some places they were saddened by the loss of a great number of their buildings, and in one community, mingled with their sorrow—almost crowding it out of their emotions—was indignant ANGER. For they observed that their schools had suffered greater damage than any other group of buildings in the city.

On every side, the cry of indignation arose. It was all too plain that poor materials had gone into the construction of those schools which were supposed to house children in security.

The most vehement cries went up from the mothers, not only in that community, but all over the country. That is natural, for all mothers believe they have the children's welfare at heart. Unwittingly, however, they may be doing them irreparable harm by failing to feed them the foods that will construct sound bodies, able to withstand the stress and strain of life.

Calcium Starvation

The mineral calcium is to the human body what steel and stone are to a building. It is necessary to construct the bony framework. The mother who fails to consume adequate calcium before her baby is born, or fails to give the child adequate calcium throughout the growing years, is as guilty as the contractor who constructs a school building of poor materials.

Without sufficient calcium, the bones become soft and porous. They break easily and knit slowly after they are broken. They may bend and twist during growth, so that the child who is a victim of calcium deficiency may become bow-legged and deformed, with a malformed chest or enlarged forehead. Rickets—that horrible deficiency disease which causes stunted mis-shapen bodies—may develop. And so may tetany—another scourge of childhood.

Crooked Defective Teeth

The teeth, too, depend upon calcium for the soundness of their structure. When this precious mineral is inadequately provided, the baby teeth may soon decay; the permanent teeth may come in crowded and unsightly—and quickly develop cavities.

There are also many other ways that calcium deficiency may handicap your children. For this mineral is intimately concerned with all the body processes. It increases the strength and pulsations of the heart; helps the blood to coagulate in case of injury, thus effectively aiding in preventing hemorrhage. It strengthens the resistance of the body in fever and other diseases. It tones up the nervous system, lessening nervous tension.

Adults Require Calcium

Adults have a vital need for calcium. A lack of this mineral not only results in defective teeth, but may also be responsible for nervousness, quivering and twitching of the muscles and defective heart action.

To be normal, the full-grown human body must contain more calcium than any other mineral element. Yet, every individual is, of necessity, born calcium-poor. For if the bones were as rigid as they must eventually become, the ordeal of birth would be too difficult for both mother and child.

Easily Lost From Body

The homemaker's task of providing adequate calcium is complicated by the fact that the body loses large amounts of calcium every day, and this loss is greater during sickness, especially in fever or when one is worried, overworked or has taken too strenuous exercise.

Outstanding nutritionists unanimously agree that the American diet is more deficient in calcium than in any other element. And it is squarely up to the mothers and homemakers to correct this tragic state of affairs, which is undermining their own efficiency and threatening the present health and future happiness of their children.

How to Obtain Calcium

Milk is an outstanding source of calcium. That is why it should form the cornerstone of every balanced diet. Cheese, which is milk in concentrated form, is likewise notable in this respect, and one and one-fourth ounces of American Cheddar cheese are the approximate equivalent of an eight-ounce glass of milk. Leaf and stem vegetables are richer in calcium than other vegetables or fruits, but while their calcium has been found to be well-absorbed by adults, it is not so readily available to children.

Among the vegetables, however, there is a wide variation, turnip tops and dandelion greens providing unusually large amounts.

List of Calcium-Rich Foods

I have prepared a list of foods rich in calcium which I shall gladly send to homemakers upon request. I urge every woman to write for this list and use it in planning the daily diet of herself, her husband and children.

You really need such a list in order to avoid the grave consequences of calcium deficiency, for so many of our common foods are calcium poor that it is possible for a diet to be abundant and varied, and still be inadequate in respect to calcium.

The list of calcium-containing foods will help you do a perfect job of building strong, fine bodies for your children.

Odd Label of Utah Mount

On the road between Bryce canyon and Zion National park in the state of Utah, there is a mountain called "Timponimo," which is the shortening of a Piute phrase meaning "two spirits to heaven and one to hell." The name derives from a fable about the love of a Piute and a Navajo for the same girl, and the subsequent death of the three in a fall from the peak.

Make a Pattern For a Slip Cover

By Ruth Wyeth Spears

THE most economical way to cut a slip cover is to make a pattern first. Do this before you buy the material, then fold several bed sheets the width of the fabric you wish to buy, and lay the pattern pieces on them to estimate the amount of goods needed.

Some of the pattern pieces may be made of paper, though unbleached muslin is better for parts that must be fitted. Allow 1 inch at all seam lines to insure an easy fit, and 3 inches for a tuck-in all around the spring seat as shown here at A. Cut the sections with straight edges, then pin them in place and shape them to follow the lines of the chair as at B. Also mark each pattern piece with an arrow, as shown, to indicate which way the grain of the goods should run. The lower sketch shows the pattern pieces pinned on the slip cover material. Brush fringe accents the main lines of this slip cover. The top of the fringe is stitched in place at the same time the seams are sewn.

NOTE: Every homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' book SEWING, for the Home Decorator. It contains forty-eight pages of step-by-step directions for making slip covers and curtains; also dressing tables; lampshades and other useful articles for the home. Price 25 cents postpaid (coin preferred). Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St. Chicago, Ill.

Glass Train

With the exception of the roof, the exterior of a train made in England is all of glass and more than 120,000 pieces of a special type were used to construct it. In the interior are glass floors and walls, a glass bathroom and pictures made of glass. The train was constructed by a Lancashire (England) firm of glassmakers to advertise its products.

To obtain this pattern, send 15 cents in stamps or coins (coins preferred) to The Sewing Circle, Household Arts Dept., 259 W. 14th St., New York, N. Y.

Are You a 'Canny' Canner?

By JOSEPHINE C. BOND.

Do you get 100 per cent returns from your canning efforts? It isn't always enough to do "lots of canning." You may have 500 full jars in your cellar at the end of the season, but if 100 of these leak because of cheap or old rubber rings, you are only getting an 80 per cent return on your labor.

One of the greatest mistakes the housewife canner can make, I have found, is to yield to the mistaken clerk who substitutes "unknown brands" for advertised brands produced by reputable manufacturers. Substitution may be all right at times, when an item can be used up in a short time. But when it comes to jar rings—play safe—buy a recognized brand.

There is a lot of difference in jar rings. The rubber used in them is compounded, or mixed, in much the same way that the batter for a cake is mixed, and, like cake batter, unless the recipe is tested and the ingredients of the best, the results will be disappointing. Inferior jar rings will "check" or crack and allow air to seep into the jars.

Klemme People In Two Re-unions Held Sunday

REUNION IN HONOR OF IOWA PIONEER HELD

Lau Family Gathered At New Hampton To Honor Memory Of Christian Lau

Living kinsfolk of Christian Lau assembled Sunday, July 10, at Fair Grounds Park, New Hampton, in honor of this frontiersman who emigrated from Germany to settle in Iowa 82 years ago.

He was born in Prebenow, Schwerin, Mecklenberg, Germany on March 10, 1829 and passed away on August 30, 1894 at Klemme. His age at time of death was 65 and he is buried in the Klemme Cemetery. His occupation was that of a farmer. He was married in Germany at the age of 22 to Dora Bruggemann and became the father of 11 children. He came to America in the year 1856 at the age of 27. On his arrival from Germany in 1853 he settled in Clayton County on a farm and lived there for 35 years until 1891. Then in 1892 he moved from Clayton County to Klemme in Hancock County and lived there until his death in 1894.

He and his wife and two sons, August C. Lau and Henry Lau, and one daughter, Fredricka, composed the family that set sail for America 82 years ago. They were 4 weeks crossing the Atlantic in a sail boat. Fredricka, the daughter, two years old, died at sea two days before landing in New York. However, she was buried on land in New York State.

August C. Lau, the oldest son, was the first of this family to migrate to Hancock County and he came in 1876 or 62 years ago.

This gathering was also in commemoration of the 74th homecoming of this union soldier who served in the Civil War at the Age of 18 and fought in that great Battle of Gettysburg 75 years ago.

Two daughters and one son still survive who were present at this affair. They are Mrs. Wm. Greibmann, 77 of Garner; Mrs. Henry Meusch, 72 of South Haven, Michigan; and Martin Lau, 66 of Farmington, Minnesota; all of whom were born in Clayton County.

Those present from Iowa points were from Elkader, Garber, Garrettsville, Garner, Guttenberg, Kalamazoo, Klemme, Mason City, Veneta and Webb. From Minnesota points Cannon Falls, Farmington, Minneapolis, Northfield, Rosemount, and Zumbrota. From Michigan points South Haven.

Being the first re-union of its kind, the attendance registered 12. This does not represent the full quota, however, it was unanimous with those present that this re-union be held again next year.

227 FOXES KILLED IN TEN WEEKS IN KOSSUTH CO.

A county-wide hunt starting April 1st and closing June 15th resulted in the destruction of 277 foxes, 1607 crows, 2151 starlings and 2246 pocket gophers, according to M. P. Weaver, president of the Kossuth County Conservation League.

The hunt was staged by the league as a contest between towns. Lone Tree won first honors by scoring 17,205 points for turning in three foxes, 38 fox pups, 126 crows, 27 gophers, 537 crows and 993 starlings.

The Algona members were second with 16,920 points. They turned in seven foxes, 57 fox pups, 206 crows, 653 starlings, 736 gophers and six crow eggs.

The Burt unit was third with 10,780 points earned by turning in two foxes, 17 fox pups, 53 crows, 202 gophers, 81 crows and 738 starlings.

Fox hunting has been a popular sport in Kossuth County for several years. League officers estimate that over 1200 foxes have been captured during the last three years of the predator control program launched by the League.

Other counties in the game bird districts have a real record to shoot at in their predator control programs, say League officials and invite other organizations to meet their competition.

Ruth Bailey Describes Wonders Of Recent Trip In Southland

Mrs. H. Bailey and Ruth left Klemme, June 7 for Amarillo, Tex. The first stop was made at Van Wert, Iowa, to visit a Williams teacher. An interesting sight on from there was the roses that were planted along the highway on into Kansas City. Some of the interesting towns we passed through were: Osceola, Leon, Lamoni (home of Graceland College), and Excelsior Springs. The Missouri River was crossed at Kansas City. Our first night was spent at Overland, Kansas, at a tourist cabin. We left Klemme on highway 69 and followed this same road for almost two days leaving it at Vinita, Oklahoma.

The next day we continued on into Kansas. The wheat fields were outstanding but trace of floods could be seen especially in the lowlands. Pecan trees were numerous throughout the entire state. The tree resembles that of our elm. A few persimmon trees were scattered about the state. Old osage hedges were still standing which made the country resemble that of the east. At Scott a large number of federal buildings were being erected. Around Pittsburg we saw the remains of the old lead and zinc mines. Harvest had begun throughout southern Kansas and northern Oklahoma. Crops were abundant due to the heavy rainfall this year. As we neared Tulsa oil derricks came into view. Tulsa is a rich city due to the oil. Some of the storage tanks hold from 50,000 to 60,000 barrels. Oklahoma City and Sapulpa are almost cities of oil derricks. Oklahoma soil is red and farming is continued even if oil is taken from the same land. Night was spent at Bristow, Oklahoma.

The third day we continued on to Amarillo. We saw a few cotton fields and the negroes working in the fields. The oil derricks still towered up in the air along with the old oak trees. We crossed the Oklahoma and Texas line on highway 66 at Texola. From here we began an upward climb as Amarillo is located in the panhandle on the cap rock with an altitude of 500 feet. Amarillo is a beautiful city of the plains.

One day we went down to the canyon at Canyon, Texas and visited the museum and the State Teachers College. In the museum we saw much interesting material pertaining to the settling of the state of Texas. In Amarillo the M. E. Church, south, covered almost an entire block. The four days spent in this city were spent with Mr. and Mrs. John Bailey.

While in Amarillo Mr. H. Bailey telephoned from Klemme that it would be possible for him to join us and then accompany us on to the coast. His trip to Amarillo was on the Rock Island and the Santa Fe lines. Due to heavy rainfall he rode through a part of Kansas where water was sixteen inches over the rails.

June 14 we left Amarillo for Phoenix, Arizona, traveling on highway 60. Then through the foot hills and the Captain Mountains. In this territory we saw many Indian homes and towns. Pine trees cover the mountains and a large saw mill is located there. Just south of Alamogordo, New Mexico we saw the White Sands National Monument. A sample of this sand was brought back to Klemme. Leaving the White Sands we traveled on crushed rock road which was the only road that was not paved on the entire trip. The thermometer reached about 100 degrees. Then we went over the St. Augustine Pass of the Organ Mountains to Las Cruces, New Mexico where the night was spent in an air-conditioned cabin.

June 15 we crossed the Rio Grande River and drove in the valley for several hours. A short time was spent in Deming, New Mexico. From here we went out into the desert and into the land of the purple sage. The best way to describe this day's drive is to say hot, hotter, and hottest. One of the most desolate sights in New Mexico and Arizona is the cemetery. It is just sand and a cactus planted here and there. The next thing of interest was the construction of the Coolidge Dam in the Gila River. It was much like Boulder Dam only on a smaller scale. At Globe, Arizona we went over the pass and on onto Phoenix. This country is the home of the Apache Indians. While in Phoenix we visited our niece and cousin, Mrs. Charles Roland. Her home is located across the street from the state capitol. The Phoenix territory is noted for its abundance of citrus fruit. Its grapefruit surpassing that of California.

June 17 we drove from Phoenix to San Diego, California. We entered California at Yuma. During this day's drive we saw Coachella Branch of the All American Canal which was being constructed through the desert to carry irrigation water for Mexico. Next we left the United States at Calexico and went into Mexicali, Mexico. Mexicali has a population of 14,842. It is a very crowded city and seemed to be very busy. Then we went through a part of the beautiful Imperial Valley which supplies the great southwest with fruit and vegetables. On over the mountains and into the city of San Diego. While in San Diego we visited the zoo, Balboa Park, where the Exposition of 1936 was held; Lindbergh Airport, and the Municipal Pier.

From San Diego to Long Beach we traveled the Coast Highway. June 19 and 20 were spent in Long Beach visiting Rainbow Pier, the Pike, and Bixby Park. Here some time was spent watching the waves and tide come in on the blue Pacific.

Next a night was spent at each of the following places with friends and relatives: Lomita, Alhambra, and Pasadena. From these places we went on picnics and sight-seeing trips. While in Forest Lawn Cemetery we visited the museum, the Wee Kirk of the Heather, built in memory of Annie Laurie of Scotland, and the Church of the Little Flower. One afternoon was spent in the Huntington Library. It is a private owned library. Much time was spent looking at the art exhibit in this library. The original painting of "Little Boy Blue" was included in the collection. Some of our friends had been deep sea fishing and brought home a large fish, so one evening we had a fish dinner out under a palm in their back yard.

June 24 found us homeward bound. We left California through Needles crossing the Mojave Desert and the Basin Mountain range. Our first night was spent at Ashfork, Arizona.

The next morning we were off for the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. This is one of the world's greatest spectacles. The gorge is 217 miles long, 9 to 13 miles wide and 6,000 feet deep. We viewed the canyon from El Tovar which has an elevation of 6,886 feet. Coming back to highway 66 we traveled from Williams to Flagstaff, Arizona, a distance of 34 miles in which the altitude raised one mile. Night was spent at Holbrook, Arizona.

Leaving Holbrook we viewed the Painted Desert, Petrified Forest National Monument, and the cliff dwellers' homes. Then we entered New Mexico and stopped at Albuquerque and Santa Fe. The latter being one of the oldest towns in the United States. The streets were narrow and crowded.

The next morning we went over the Raton Pass and entered Colorado. Then we drove through Pueblo and Colorado Springs into Denver. The snow capped mountains were seen from this highway. In Denver we visited the State Capitol and Museum. Several hours were spent shopping.

Sioux City was our next stop. One night was spent between Denver and Sioux City at Julesburg, Colorado. Here we encountered a minor dust storm, driving about 50 miles in it. The dust seemed to be coming from the southwest or from the dust bowl. Two nights were spent in Sioux City, Iowa, visiting neighbors and friends. We arrived in Klemme, June 30 at 4 o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Keraus Surprised By Relatives July 10th

Twenty-five immediate relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. C. Keraus gathered at their home Sunday forenoon, July 10th and successfully carried out a surprise on them in celebration of their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary.

A mock wedding featured the entertainment before dinner. In the ceremony Mrs. Fred Kluckhohn was the bride, Eugene Kluckhohn the groom, Mrs. Clarence Kluckhohn the bridesmaid, and Donald Turgasen the best man. Mrs. C. G. Waterman played the piano and her daughter, Marian, sang the wedding solos.

The dinner was planned and served by the self invited guests and the group was seated four at a table, with Mr. and Mrs. Keraus and their two sons, Otho and Verl, at the center table. A silver arch decorated with silver bells hung over this table and a decorated wedding cake served as the centerpiece. Beautiful bouquets adorned the guests' tables and the color scheme of silver and blue was carried out in the decorations.

During the afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Keraus were presented with a purse of silver and other gifts. The balance of the afternoon was spent in visiting and playing games.

Later brick ice cream with a silver bell design, and cake was served, after which the guests departed for home wishing Mr. and Mrs. Keraus many happy returns of the day.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—It is entirely possible that many people have failed to piece together several developments of national import lately, and may have missed the significance of an action of congress in its closing days. The two incidents to which I refer are the federal grand jury indictment at South Bend, Ind., of a number of automobile manufacturing executives and the action of congress in adoption of a resolution providing for a broad-gauge inquiry into big business. The two, when pieced together, spell a sensational drive against the "malefactors of great wealth."

The result? Well, let's examine the scheme, the pattern and the prospects.

There was a period in 1936, it will be recalled, when business interests felt that President Roosevelt was preparing to follow a middle-of-the-road policy as far as government relations with business was concerned. During that period, there was a considerable improvement in general business. In that interim of time, as far as any observers could reach a conclusion, the President was relying on advice from many men in whom business had confidence. But there came a sudden end. Out of the clear sky, Mr. Roosevelt proposed reorganization of the Supreme court of the United States and the addition of six justices whom he could appoint at once. Through weeks of battle when it became apparent that one guess was as good as another whether the President would win, business men and women again became afraid. That was when the present depression began. It was also the time when Mr. Roosevelt turned away from his previous close advisers and began listening to the new brain trust which has come to be known as the "board of strategy."

As the depression became sharper and the numbers of unemployed increased with startling rapidity, the board of strategy sought means to offset the condition. The group also had to find a goat—which is always done when plans go awry. There followed then the vicious and untempered attacks on "big business" by the trust-busting Robert H. Jackson, then favored at the White House as the next Democratic candidate for the New York governorship. Secretary Ickes also let loose his vocabulary and none can deny the interior secretary's capacity for speaking biting words. For weeks and weeks, we were treated to a barrage of words in which "big business" was pictured as beyond the pale of good citizenry and ought to be destroyed.

The trust-busting drive was not as successful in gaining public acclaim as had been hoped for. The truth is that it failed to get the country excited at all and the profit to the trust busters did not materialize as had been the case when "Teddy" Roosevelt was swinging a big stick of demagoguery in the same field of political endeavor. Indeed, this drive flopped at the start whereas the drive by the earlier Roosevelt was good politics for several years.

It was here, according to the best information available, that the tactics changed. The change in methods is the real reason for the story. Thus, it can be said that the trust-busting drive is still going on as strong as ever but it is going on in several fields without any apparent connection because the board of strategy has lost none of its determination to convince the nation that it is being ruined by those same malefactors of great wealth toward which Teddy Roosevelt waved his fist and bared his teeth.

Now, to put the pieces of the picture together. The first section comprises the indictment of the automobile moguls, Edsel Ford, Walter P.

How the Picture Looks

Chrysler, Alfred P. Sloan and William Knudsen, among some sixty-odd officials of Ford, Chrysler and General Motors and the companies affiliated with them in the financing of motor cars bought on the installment plan. They are charged with violation of the antitrust laws, although how anybody can believe the Ford interests ever could or would play ball with the other two, I have been unable to see. Anyway, big news stories were carried by the press services from South Bend, and the department of justice here had much "background" information which officials were delighted to hand to any inquiring reporter. They did this in order to co-operate with the press inasmuch as the story was so sensational and so vast in scope that none of us writers here could possibly be permitted to miss any phase of it.

The other phase of the continuing drive against "big business" takes the form of a great inquiry, thinly disguised as a general study of business practices. It is a somewhat unusual type of investigation and is to be managed in a very unusual manner. The committee that will do the job is made up of three senators and three representatives, and a representative from each of a number of executive departments and commissions. And the important fact in addition is that the $500,000 which the investigation will cost will be expended under the direction of President Roosevelt.

To bring it own to simple terms, when congress adopted the resolution for the inquiry, the board of strategy was able to turn on enough political steam to force adoption of an amendment placing the funds under the direction of the President, rather than under control of congress, as usually is done when congress participates in an investigation. That action means that investigators for the committee will be able to rely upon laws covering inquiries and searches made by the department of justice, the federal trade commission, the securities and exchange commission and the national labor relations board, among others. The combined powers will be all-comprehensive.

To explain further the full meaning of these broad powers, it is necessary to cite constitutional provisions prohibiting illegal search and seizure. The investigators for the committee must be able to dig deep into private records of any bank or corporation or individual if they are to accomplish fully the desire of the board of strategy for complete exposure of all the secrets of business. When they get all of those records, of course they can analyze them and place their own construction on the business practices. That is today, by inference and innuendo, hint or open charge, the investigators can smear anything or anybody—and the newspapers will spread the information. It being an official investigation, it will be followed closely by the press and, as usual, there will be little chance for the individuals to reply. When they are marked to be smeared, they will be smeared, whether justly or unjustly. It is a deplorable thing that our government stoops to that sort of thing but it has done so in a number of instances.

Now, as to the main objectives. Every indication is that the guiding hands, in the projected investigation are determined to destroy two great masses of capital. I mean, they intend to break up the combination of men and money in two instances. The banking house of J. P. Morgan and company, and the huge industrial setup of the DuPonts are marked. Whether they like it or not, those two groups are to be made the goats of the depression of 1937-38, and those on the inside recognize that it is a fight to the finish. There will be other corporations, other individuals, whose business lives will be laid bare, but the Morgans and the DuPonts are the real targets. The board of strategy believes the Morgan bank and the DuPont interests are chiefly responsible for the refusal of business to yield on many of the crackpot ideas of the professors, and so it is inevitable those two groups will be cast as the villains.

There arises, next, the question whether such an investigation and such a prosecution as has been started at South Bend will do the country any good. One ought not prejudge. It may be that the motor magnates and their corporations are guilty as pups. It may be that the Morgans and the DuPonts and scores of others among families with great fortunes have set about to wreck the New Deal. But the question in my mind is: why has it not been discovered before? It seems to me that if there was so much corruption, so much improper influence being exercised and such illegal use of money power as is represented by those who were pushing the investigation, it should have been several years ago. Mr. Roosevelt has been in office five years and it appears strange that there was no effort to uncover these demons until the business of the country as a whole lost confidence in the policies of the national administration.

These developments have come along as the depression grew worse. They reach their climax of preparation at a time when another federal agency, the board of governors of the federal reserve system, says that the industrial depression in the United States now is the worst in the world. Neither England nor any other industrial country abroad has experienced a depression that has been as precipitous as the United States is experiencing, the board said in an official statement. The power is not given to me to determine the numerous and varied facts, but the processes of deduction eliminate many possible causes for our nation's condition—most of them, indeed, excepting governmental meddling and the harassing of business, big and little.

TOWN OF THE PASSION PLAY

Judas in Private Life Paints Pictures.

Oberammergau Gives to the World Drama of Christianity Every Decade

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

A CHANGE which emphasizes unchanging tradition has taken place in Oberammergau, Germany, the small Bavarian town where every decade a performance of the Passion Play attracts thousands of visitors. The change came through the death of Anton Lang, for thirty years the former Christus of the Passion Play. Death, however, changes the players but does not stop the presentation of the Passion Play, which for centuries has been performed to fulfill a vow of the villagers in the Seventeenth century.

Until about 150 years ago the sight of the towering mountains filled the people of Oberammergau with awe; in fact, fear; and they were looked upon more as drawbacks than as objects of beauty and inspiration.

The custom of offsetting the depressing effect of the looming rocky background by vivid color still prevails, and besides old but ever fresh fresco paintings depicting scenes from the Bible on the walls of the houses, new ones are beginning to decorate several homes. These show a more modern trend, and generally are done by young Bavarian artists. They lend vivid color to a street scene already bright with houses painted yellow, pink, green, and blue.

Hardly a house lacks a balcony, and this, like all the windowsills, is lined with a profusion of flowers.

Green shutters and painted frames around the windows put a special stress on the "eyes" of most homes.

Usually near the door, in large letters, is exhibited the name and occupation of the owner, who might well appear to be the proprietor of the entire valley as he complacently walks through the streets and fields, hills and mountains. Born here, he feels himself part of all this.

In the Home and Fields.

The inside of his birthplace breathes the same spirit. The center is not the kitchen whence the healthful, frugal meals come, but the living room with a carved wooden crucifix solemnly hanging in one corner. There is the cradle of family life. There the men and women and children assemble when they come home from field or shop. The fields yield just enough grass for the cattle and potatoes for the people, though most of the villagers have their own little gardens.

Farmhouse and stable are usually in one building. This saves the peasant many a step in bad weather and keeps him always near his beloved cows, which in turn help supply warmth in the long, cold winter. The arrival of the White King is hailed by everybody, for the thick blanket he always spreads over the mountains and the valley does not mean being buried for four or five months.

Oberammergau lies in about the same latitude as Montreal, and masses of snow cover the mountains, at times to a depth of 30 feet. Many visitors come to try their luck on skis, and skiing becomes an easy accomplishment for the local youngsters.

St. Peter Distributes Milk. Singing and whistling, Hubert Mayr, the St. Peter of the Passion Play, drives his little pony cart through the town every day, distributing milk among the people. How happy and pleased he is that at last his life's dream has come true and he has become "St. Peter!"

The meek manners of Hugo Rutz, the village blacksmith, would never lead one to guess that on the stage he was the fiery high priest, Caiaphas, inciting the mob against Jesus.

Anton Lechner, teacher of drawing at the local woodcarving school, is just as much of a surprise.

Ludwig Lang, fierce-looking Barabbas on the stage, is a peaceful cowherd who may be seen walking along the street at 6 o'clock almost any morning, driving a herd of cows into the fields and hills, and not returning until 6 at night.

That is the rush hour for the cows, and traffic has to comply with their whims as they slowly trot homeward, never minding the honking of automobiles that might get into their path.

The Play Is Their Life Mission.

Just as the ability to act seems to be in the blood of the majority, the people of Oberammergau hold a deeply inbred feeling of personal responsibility toward their important task, their sacred tradition. They live and die for their play. They do not play to live, but live to play—which may at times appear incomprehensible to the hurried traveler, rushing in and out again without ever penetrating more deeply into the meaning of the villagers' work, habits, and customs.

All amusements, such as dancing, are prohibited during the solid year of preparation for, and concentration upon, the Passion Play. Yet the village, during its six months of rehearsing under Georg Lang's most able direction (there are more than 30 families of the name of Lang in Oberammergau), dons festive attire. Houses look more attractive. Gardens, streets, walks, and parks hum with activity.

The year 1940 will display about the same course of things, but there will be more buses and automobiles from May until September. Once again, for a period of five months, the village will be handed over, willy-nilly, to the countless visitors, their prejudices and criticisms, their whims, their admiration and praise of what is but natural to those laboring in the homes and playing on the stage of the mammoth theater before 6,200 spectators, occasionally as often as five times a week.

How the Play Is Presented.

From 8:15 a. m. to 5:25 p. m., with two hours' recess for lunch, the thousands watch the performance with tense interest from beginning to end, never turning their eyes, which are often dimmed with tears, from the recently built and modernized central stage.

In front of it, flanked by the house of Pilate and the palace of Annas, opens the proscenium, 140 feet wide, on which—rain or sunshine—the mass scenes take place and the 47 members of the chorus—all local talent—appear, led in and out by the majestic figure of the Speaker of the Prologue, whose task is to introduce each act of a tableau. He has more lines than any other member of the cast.

There are 24 of these artistically set and lavishly mounted pictures, irregularly scattered among the 16 acts and representing scenes from the Old Testament, running parallel with the New.

The very beginning of the performance, announced by the boom of a cannon discharged on a distant hill, plunges the audience into deep silence, and absorption. Orchestral, choir, prologue, and tableaux heighten this mood; then the curtains part.

Impressive Climax of the Drama.

Now Christ triumphantly enters Jerusalem. The jealous priests begin their work against Him, while Christ bids farewell to His Mother and friends at Bethany before returning to the city of His doom.

There the last supper unites Him and His twelve disciples once more. Judas hastens away to betray His Christ is seized.

The afternoon sees Him before the high council, slandered, mocked, and jeered, and eventually sent to Pontius Pilate, who passes Him on to King Herod. Peter repents his sin of denial, whereas Judas finds no way out but the rope.

Christ is scourged and crowned with thorns, and presented to a raging mob in a scene of highest dramatic values. Pilate finally hands Him over to His enemies, and, with the Cross on His bleeding shoulders, Christ staggers up to Golgotha to be fastened to the Cross, to die, pierced by a spear in a realistic manner.

We see Him rise again from the tomb, and, in the finest of all tableaux, ascend to Heaven.

DEBORAH: EMERGENCY LEADERSHIP

LESSON TEXT—Judges 4:1-9, 12-14.
GOLDEN TEXT—Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?—Ester 4:17.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Why Deborah Sang.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Why Deborah Sang.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Ready for Emergencies.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Emergency Leadership.

"Every man did that which was right in his own eyes." Such is the divine summary of what was wrong in Israel during the period of the judges (Judges 21:25). "There was no king in Israel," no competent and inspiring leadership. The people lived according to the whims of the day, and, as always, humanity left to itself drifted to lower and lower levels. This was true morally and spiritually and ultimately politically, for they came repeatedly into bondage to other nations and were only delivered as God raised up judges to lead them to repentance and victory, as well as to rule over them.

I. A People in Disorder (vv. 1-3). Any people that forgets God and begins to live after the dictates of the flesh will at length come to the place where some strong man with "chariots of iron" will rule over them. We, in America, look at the other nations of the world, viewing their plight with sympathy but ever assuring ourselves that "it can't happen here." We ought to arouse ourselves and face the facts lest our own land, happy in its possession of God's great blessings of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness," abuse those privileges, neglect the worship of God, spurn the leadership He gives us, and become "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof" (II Tim. 3:4, 5). If we do not awake and repent the Lord may have to "sell" us, as He did Israel, into the hands of the oppressor.

II. A Leader Called of God (vv. 4-9).

God always has His man ready for the hour of need—only in this case His man was a woman. Glorious indeed is the record of faithful and capable womanhood in annals of God's work on earth. Deborah was a woman of unique gifts—a poetess, a prophetess, and withal "the wife of Lapidath," evidently a woman who cared well for her own household.

Brains and natural ability are much needed, especially in a time such as ours when few there are who even care to think for themselves and few who have any desire to develop native ability except for the purpose of "making money." But true leadership calls for more than talent and intelligence; it calls for a burning in the soul, a divine zeal, the urge of God in the heart.

Deborah had this fiery touch upon her life. Barak, while undoubtedly a man of ability, evidently did not have it. Many excuses have been offered for the weakness indicated in verse eight. It has been said that he was cautious, or that he wanted to give the place of honor to Deborah as the leader of her people. These suggestions may be true, but somehow one has the feeling that what he really lacked was the "flaming heart." May God give it to us, that in our much doing of His work the divine fire may warm and inspire us!

III. A Divine Victory (vv. 12-14).

God gave Deborah and Barak a great victory, but note that it was God and not man who brought about the defeat of Jabin (Judges 4:15, 23). It was a complete victory and the enemies of Israel troubled them no more for many a day.

Dr. Wilbur M. Smith aptly points out that we should look "upon these conflicts in the book of Judges as certain symbols of the great conflict that every Christian knows as he wrestles, not with flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, against the world-rulers of darkness and spiritual wickedness in heavenly places. Victory is certain only when the Lord is with us and only when we walk in His will and contend against evil in His power. We are more than conquerors, but only through the Lord Jesus Christ" (Peloubet's Select Notes).

In closing this lesson the writer of these notes wishes to recognize the blessing of God in enabling him to complete two years of this service to Him and to His people. He also wishes to thank those readers in every state of the Union and in a number of foreign countries who have written to him words of appreciation, encouragement and counsel.

Value of Meditation.

It is not he that reads most, but he that meditates most on Divine truth, that will prove the choicest, wisest, strongest Christian.—Bishop Hall.

Attaining Perfection

The warm loves and fears; that swept over us as clouds, must lose their finite character and blend with God, to attain their own perfection.—Emerson.

Quick, Easy Stitches For Summer Frocks

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS
A BIT of hand embroidery on the collar and sleeves of a little girl's dress is always the smartest trimming. Quickly made stitches and interesting color may be combined to give unusual effects.

The dress shown here is of blue chambray. The collar and sleeves are edged with blank stitch in a deeper blue as shown at A. Between each blanket stitch a tiny loop stitch is made in white and three larger white loop stitches at the top of every second blanket stitch as shown at B. When used on a fabric of the weight the embroidery should rather coarse to show up well. All six strands of a six strand embroidery cotton may be used or No. 5 pearl cotton. For a dress of fine sheer material such as dainty or organdie use finer embroidery thread. Other attractive combinations are pink material with deep rose and French blue embroidery, yellow with blue and orange or green with yellow and white. For a printed fabric repeat two of the strongest tones in the printed design or use white collar and cuffs embroidered the background color of the print and one of the brighter tones.

NOTE: If you wish to use the weekly articles for reference, paste them in a scrapbook, they are not included in either Sewing Book No. 1 or 2. Book Sewing for the Home Decorates covers curtains, slipcovers, dressing tables; 48 pages of fascinating directions. Book 2 illustrates 90 embroidery stitches with numerous applications; doll clothes and gift items. Order by number enclosing 25 cents for each book desired. If you order both books leaflet on making crazy quilts with 36 stitches illustrated, will be included free. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

Rifle Practice Below

When an oil well is drilled, sands may be encountered, passed by the drill in anticipation of richer deposits below. But when the deep deposits are exhausted, engineers want to tap the upper levels. So they've just devised a method of lowering a barreled gun and shooting 30 caliber bullets at the proper depth. That sets off the oil flow.

By Jergie

A dangerous sport participated in by Klemme youngsters has been called to my attention and so I pass it along for what it may be worth especially to parents. And that is the practice of riding bicycles around town after dark. In only one or two cases are the bicycles equipped with a head light and red tail light. Riding at night without lights on the bicycle is a dangerous sport as the motorist cannot see the riders, especially if another car is approaching. A small additional sum spent in equipping a bicycle with proper lights may save a serious accident to the rider. In the meantime it might be well for parents to warn their children to confine their night riding to streets where traffic is light.

INTERSECTIONAL CRASHES

Of all types of automobile accidents intersectional crashes seem to be the most unnecessary. An intersection does not drop down on a road out of a clear sky. You can see it ahead even if it is not marked by warning signs.

If two cars are approaching an intersection, at right angles to each other, and both drivers are alert and expecting trouble, there's no danger of an accident.

If two cars are approaching an intersection and one driver is on the alert, but the other is trusting to luck that nothing's coming the skill and forbearance of the alert driver are usually sufficient to avoid trouble.

But—if two drivers are approaching an intersection and both are trusting to luck that nothing's coming—then you have an accident.

Don't depend on the other fellow to make way for you at an intersection. He may be depending on you to make way for him!

GIVE RIGHT-OF-WAY BUT DON'T INSIST ON TAKING IT

Having the right-of-way won't help you heal broken bones in the hospital. Always give it, but don't be too sure the other fellow will give it to you, and it's better to be healthy than right. In approaching simultaneously at right angles, the car to your right has the right-of-way. You have it over the man to your left. But use common sense about it, and you won't have to argue it in Court.

IT'S JUST COMMON SENSE

Common Sense tells you that you should not pass cars on blind curves or hills, go around corners too fast, or race through blind intersections. But honestly, now, haven't you done all those things when you had a business matter on your mind, or were carrying on a conversation?

The first law of Common Sense is to keep your mind on what you are doing. When you are driving a car your first duty is to keep a 3500 or 4000 pound projectile under control, and if you keep that in mind, you will have few accidents—if any. Think consciously, as you come up behind a car: "Maybe there's someone coming in a bigger hurry than I am!" Think consciously, as you drive along at 50—"I can just get stopped by the time I reach that schoolhouse 250 feet down the road!"

It's Smart to drive carefully—and Common Sense is the first requirement of Careful Driving.

TAX NIGHTMARE COMING

Thirteen months from now, according to slide rule calculations of a government economist, the national debt of the federal government will be in excess of 43 billion dollars—double what it was five years ago. For the fiscal year 1939, beginning July 1, next, congress has authorized the expenditure of 12.5 billions, 6 billion of which will be "deficit financed."

Breaking this vast sum down, it is found that during fiscal 1939, the federal government will spend $1,027,397,250 a month; $34,246,575 every day; $1,426,940 each hour; $23,782 every minute; or $396 every second!

So what! Soak the rich, you say? According to the government economist (who got his figures from a treasury report), only forty-three people out of the 130,000,000 in the United States had incomes of a million dollars or more in 1937. Their aggregate income was 73 million dollars and if every penny was squeezed from them it would barely meet the government expenditures for 48 hours.

Once more we are forcibly reminded that taxes—and deficits—are paid in the sweat of labor by the average citizen.

BEST FRIENDS

It isn't fun to be thrifty when you're young. It's more pleasant to spend ten dollars for amusements than to put it in a bank or a life insurance policy. When you grow old it becomes a different story.

Tens of thousands of men now in dire want, once had good jobs, substantial incomes, and even fortunes. They had "fun" then. They're paying the piper now. They can look forward to spending their declining years as wards of public or private charitable agencies, remembering with bitterness what might have been.

Every man owes it to himself, to his dependents and to the society in which he lives, to prepare for the exigencies of the future. Life insurance and similar instruments of thrift are the best friends the average man has.

TAX TERMITES EATING YOU

Those who still believe in the ancient fallacy that the "rich can pay the cost of government" will be startled by a recent survey showing that if everyone had to turn over to the government all income in excess of $5,000 a year, the sum collected would pay only one-fifth of the total cost of government—federal, state and local.

In other words, the great bulk of taxes are "hidden taxes"—and they are paid principally by the person of small and moderate means. A loaf of bread, for example, is taxed 57 times. The tax collector gets his share when you pay your rent, buy a suit of clothes, go to a movie or do almost anything else.

Get Your Pigs In Under The Wire

The price of hogs is comparatively high and the price of feed very low which makes it all to the advantage of the feeder.

A representative of one of the large packing companies said a few days ago that the price of hogs would undoubtedly stay very well until the heavy run of spring pigs started to come to market late this year, so in order to get in on the higher market it is necessary for the farmer to push his pigs along just as fast as possible and get them to market at the earliest date possible. In order to do this it is necessary to feed a well balanced concentrate such as Mor-Gain Pig Meal or Mor-Gain 40% Hog Supplement.

If corn is fed in self-feeders or kept before the pigs all the time with a liberal supply of either of these concentrates kept before them all the time these pigs should go to market at six months of age weighing from 200 to 225 pounds and if this is done the hogs will undoubtedly sell for $2.00 to $3.00 per hundred more than hogs fed on corn alone which would not go to market until they were from nine to twelve months of age.

Many of our customers are using the 40% Hog Supplement concentrate to mix with home grown corn and oats. If this method is used, one sack of the Hog Supplement can be mixed with 200 pounds of ground corn and 200 pounds of ground oats which will give you a feed of about 16% in protein and is an ideal ration for feeding either as a slop feed or it may be fed dry through a self-feeder as a complete feed.

Fabrics of Sheer Loveliness

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

FAVORITE theme this summer is the sheer loveliness of gauzy, airy-fairy transparent fabrics of either cotton or silk. The sheer fabrics are simply enchanting and are the sought-for kind to go into gowns for picturesque party wear or for dancing star-spangled skies or when at fashionable roof-garden binges where beauty and romance keep rendezvous.

Designed to grace summer-evening parties, these gowns are fashioned of wispy, either printed or monotone, organdies, crisp, sheer and intricate, or of dainty silk marquisette which is an especial favorite. There are the soft fine cottons in pretty colors and as for every summer wardrobe is expected to include at least one party frock of it. As a matter of fact, it is playing a stellar role in summer. The lace that captures the heart of enthusiasts is a lace-cobweb type the pattern of which is a mere tracery. Some of this fetching lace have been used in pleated skirts, since it is beautifully to this treatment. The dance in ingenuities of simple cottons made up in a considered quite the thing to do. The thrilling note of this season's organdies is so many new types have been added to the list.

Printed organdies either printed or black and white, printed sell at sight. They are charmingly and are easily required little or no pressing. They are crisp and sprightly as for week-end trips they are they do not crush in packing. They will be delighted with the printed Swiss chiffon organdie. The entrancing frock centered with outspread skirt in the and gives an idea of how effective the lace-stripe organdie

HANDSOME SUIT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

CHERIE NICHOLAS says that the most interesting tricks with twist and as time goes on the making on added interest. You see a dress or blouse of which tie themselves into knots or twist into cleavages be assured that the is a "last word" fashion. The look for these interesting inter-coiled effects and our new frocks accordingly. The type of styling invites the color contrasts. For in the bodice top of a navy blue shoulder, say in the new shade, the same coiled, and perhaps knotted across the line with infinite grace. Or may be in monotone, the twisted designfulness being a trimming feature. White frocks, with twists done in vivid contrast or carried in pastel tones are top fashion this summer. A feature in styling is the shirred bodice with skirt material simply tailored. Over shirred jacket is like a fashion highlight. Chiffon and marquisette yield to this treatment charmingly.

Paquin Favorite. The white Paquin model for evening, the long skirt of bias cut by a marquisette blouse—by a thing in white, black or colored dinner dress. Colored dinner or evening gowns are a heavy favorite.

makes up. The charming and picturesque Winterhalter vogue is reflected in the styling of this very tiny-waisted and full-skirted dinner-and-dancing gown (a winsome garden party frock, too) in one of the fashionable printed Swiss chiffon organdies. A very fine lace patterning in white stands out clearly against a deep navy blue background. There is a full-cut underskirt of white organdie to make the frock stand out almost on ballet skirt lines. The diminutive bolero jacket worn over the drop-shoulder bodice is finished with little ruffles of val lace laid on over the lace print.

The material that fashions the frock to the left is peach silk mousseline. It is prettily styled with vertical ruche-ruffling of self-fabric outlining the skirt gores, the puffed sleeves and there are ruffles about the neck.

Hyacinth blue lace with touches of cerise lace is used for the graceful gown centered in the picture. It was introduced at the Miami fashion show and is one of those pleasing types that carry on into new triumphs for summer party wear. One of its charms is that the lace indicates stripes and striped effects lead in the mode.

The printed chiffon frock to the left gives a delightful interpretation of the slim silhouette for summer. The patterning is spaced tulips in blue, red, green and black on a sheer white background. The gathered bodice suggests the Directoire. Contrasting shades of green and blue silk make the girdle and sash which forms a train. Flower bracelets are worn with it and an enormous poppy on the head instead of a hat, which goes to show the intriguing and unique ways in which flowers now play their important role in costume ensembling.

One handsome suit like the model pictured, in your wardrobe and your problem is solved as to looking smartly attired for any occasion. Contrast stitching is a swank accent to the interesting detail of this well-tailored town and country suit in fine lightweight wool shetland. Note the scalloped pockets that repeat the decorative stitching that enhances the seams in the skirt.

Star Dust

- ★Hurricane Elopement
- ★Story of Earhart
- ★Norma Steps Out

—By Virginia Vale—

MOVIEDOM is still gasping a little over the elopement of Frances Langford, the radio singer and movie actress, and Jon Hall, who skyrocketed to fame in "Hurricane" and hasn't been seen on the screen since.

Just after it was announced that they wouldn't marry until he had become more firmly established in pictures, they slipped off to Prescott, Ariz., with her mother and his sister and got married. But Hollywood didn't know about it until four days later, possibly because he used his real name, Louis Locher.

Frances Langford Even after Hall made such a hit in "Hurricane" he drew only $150 a week for some time—mere chicken feed in Hollywood—but this salary was finally raised to $200.

Kay Francis' last picture under her present contract will probably be based on a story that she herself wrote and sold to the studio. It's all about a famous aviatrix who goes into a round-the-world flight contest, and gets lost on a desert isle. Can it be possible that Miss Francis heard about Amelia Earhart?

Fashion news: Claudette Colbert has a daytime costume of dark blue with white floral buttons down the side of the jacket, like one which the duchess of Windsor likes to wear. Recently, one evening in New York, Helen Vinson wore a black chiffon gown with a skirt yards and yards wide, banded with many rows of narrow black velvet ribbon. No shoulder straps.

The New York revival of those two Valentino pictures, "The Sheik" and "The Son of the Sheik," was so successful that Agnes Ayres, the heroine, has been booked for a 20-weeks' personal appearance tour. And two more Valentino pictures will be brought forth.

Speaking of those Valentino pictures, Verree Teasdale and Adolph Menjou were in New York, before sailing for Europe, when they were being shown, and he was none too anxious for her to see "The Sheik" and see how funny he looked on the screen in those days.

Norma Shearer would like to do a smart modern comedy, after her long siege of costume pictures, so you may see her in "The Women."

which had a long run as a successful play before being handed over to motion pictures. Norma has a way of getting what she wants—as Marion Davies found out when they both wanted "Marie Antoinette" and Norma got it.

Remember Eric von Stroheim, who used to make pictures ("Greed" and "Foolish Wives" among them), that cost millions? He's acting in French pictures now—which usually cost not more than $75,000.

Incidentally, Jean Hersholt was reminiscing about "Greed" the other day—how it was way over the right length, and von Stroheim felt so badly about having it cut that he wouldn't even look at the film that was finally released.

ODDS AND ENDS—A radio actor and director who learned nineteen languages is on the air—as a dialect stogie and imitator of animals. . . . Many of the professional radio announcers are bad, but after hearing a dozen amateurs try out the other day the worst of them sounded marvelous. . . . Bette Davis is fussed to be included in a list of movie-don'ts ten most beautiful girls; said "The idea is silly, because I'm not even a near beauty." . . . It's said that Metro spent $250,000 developing "I Married an Angel" as a picture, and finally abandoned it—whereupon it was bought for the stage, where it's a tremendous success.

Explains What Is Meant by

CORRECT NUTRITION

Describes How to Construct a Balanced Diet, So Essential to Maintain Optimal Health

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th St., New York City.

TO SOME families, a summons to the dinner table means nothing more than a chance to satisfy hunger. To others, it represents an opportunity to gratify the palate, sometimes to the extent of overtaxing the digestive system.

Neither of these extremes fulfills the true function of food, which is to provide adequately but not to excess, for growth, maintenance and repair of the body.

Food May Fail to Feed

You can satisfy hunger without providing correct nutrition. You can partake of delicious-tasting foods to the point of over-indulgence—without meeting bodily requirements.

The mere spending of money will not insure good nutrition, for extremely poor diets can be found in households where the income is large and the food budget is ample. What counts is learning to provide the right foods in the correct proportions. The return in health will be more than worth the investment of effort in acquiring this knowledge.

A Balanced Diet

Science has discovered what foods are necessary to help build top health and keep us 100 per cent fit. The amount of food required by a man for a day's work can be accurately determined. We know that a specific disease may be produced by one diet and cured by another; that growth can be influenced through changes in the quality of the dietary; that old age may be deferred by choosing the food with care.

We know that the body is a working machine which never stops but may slow down or get out of order unless the daily diet includes every element, every mineral, every vitamin needed to maintain health and avoid the deficiency diseases.

Seven Essentials

There are seven factors to be considered in planning a balanced diet. Protein for building body tissue and repairing the millions of cells that are worn out daily. Carbohydrates to produce quick heat and energy. Fats—a more compact form of fuel, which are also essential in a satisfactory diet. Minerals which serve both as builders and regulators of body processes. The six vitamins, A, B, C, D, E and G, that also act as regulators and prevent a number of deficiency diseases. Water—which serves as a vehicle by which food is carried to the tissues. And cellulose or bulk—required for the normal functioning of the intestinal tract.

Danger in Omitting One Food Substance

The homemaker who fails to take every one of these factors into consideration is depriving her husband of the opportunity to develop his greatest efficiency. Moreover, she may be robbing her children of their birthright. During every day of childhood, the body is being built, and defects in body structure are likely to arise if the child is improperly nourished. It is then that disease and disability make their appearance as a result of faulty nutrition. How tragic to deprive the young body of substances so necessary to its well being.

How to Check the Diet for Balance

Perhaps you are like the homemakers who tell me that they do not know a protein from a carbohydrate. Or it may be that while you understand the difference, you do not know what quantities should be included in the diet each day.

To simplify your task of serving balanced menus at every meal, I have prepared a Homemaker's Chart for Checking Nutritional Balance. In convenient chart form, it shows what foods should be included in the diet every day and gives the standard amount for each food. There are also skeleton menus outlined by food classifications, which enable you to plan balanced menus for every meal by making a choice from each group of required foods.

I urge every homemaker to write for this chart, and use it daily. Then you won't make such common mistakes as serving a dried legume as a vegetable at a meal in which meat is used, which tends to concentrate too much protein in one meal; or choosing a too-heavy dessert following a main course that is overly rich in carbohydrates.

60 Per Cent Carbohydrates

Carbohydrates should form at least 60 per cent of the supply of food fuel. Rarely are menus deficient in carbohydrates, because they are so widely distributed in such common foods as cereals, bread, potatoes, macaroni products, sweets, and sweet fruits and vegetables, such as oranges, grapes, apples and peas.

Fats should supply about 20 per cent of the caloric content of the diet. They are obtained from butter, margarine, cream, egg yolk, salad dressings, vegetable oils and the fat of meats.

A protein food should be provided at each meal. Meat, poultry,

Rose as Rent

Free Homemaker's Chart for Checking Nutritional Balance

PLANNING a balanced diet will cease to be a puzzle if you send for the Homemaker's Chart for Checking Nutritional Balance, offered free, by C. Houston Goudiss.

It lists the foods and the standard amounts that should be included in the daily diet, and includes skeleton menus for breakfast, dinner and lunch or supper, to guide you in selecting the proper foods in each classification.

A postcard is sufficient to bring you this valuable aid to good menu planning. Just ask for the Nutrition Chart. Address C. Houston Goudiss, 6 East 39th St., New York City fish, eggs, cheese, milk and most nuts supply complete protein. Cereals and legumes furnish incomplete protein which may be supplemented by the complete protein of milk.

The Protective Foods

It is essential that the diet should contain an abundance of minerals and vitamins which are furnished by the protective foods—milk, eggs, fruits and vegetables.

Cellulose or bulk is obtained from fruits, vegetables and whole grain cereals. Water comes from juicy fruits, succulent vegetables, milk and other beverages, as well as the water that is consumed as a beverage.

To provide adequate amounts of the seven food essentials at every meal—to avoid the mistake of serving too much of one type of food and too little of another—should be the worthy aim of every homemaker. You will find the task considerably easier if you send for the Homemaker's Chart. Tack it up in your kitchen or in the room where you plan your menus, and use it to check the nutritional balance of every meal you prepare.

If you faithfully follow the food program outlined in the chart, you will help to assure your family of correct nutrition. This is the most priceless gift you could bestow upon them. For nutrition is the architect that draws the plans of human destiny. In providing the right foods, you lay a firm foundation for health on which to rear a life of happiness and success.

Questions Answered

Mrs. F. C. T.—Dried figs contain from 60 to 70 per cent sugar and 4 to 5 per cent protein. They are a fine energy food.

Mrs. A. G.—Prunes are a fine natural laxative food for those in normal health. They furnish vitamins A, B and G. But they must not replace oranges or tomatoes as they do not supply vitamin C.

A. F. B.—When thorough chewing is impossible, food can be finely minced or put through a sieve, to make it easily digestible.

Mrs. G. L.—There is evidence that a lack of vitamin A more quickly affects the eyes of children than adults. However, both children and adults require generous amounts of this vitamin to help maintain healthy eyes. A shortage may affect the tear glands causing a failure of secretion and dryness. The membrane becomes sensitive and inflamed, and the lids may swell.

LEARN TO SWIM BUT KNOW THE SAFETY RULES

1. Everyone should know how to swim. Any of your swimming friends would be happy to teach you. At the beaches and swimming pools experts are available as teachers.
2. Always swim with a companion. Frequently tragedies have overtaken lone swimmers whose distress was not known.
3. Be certain that the water is deep enough before diving. Broken necks and death have resulted from failure of a diver to obey this rule. Submerged rocks or logs, or even shallow water, have taken their toll.

How To Avoid Cramps

4. Wait an hour after eating before swimming. Cramps frequently result if this rule is not obeyed.
5. Remain in shallow water if you are not a good swimmer.
6. Swim along the beach, not away from it.
7. Call for help only if you need it. Swimmers should never playfully simulate distress. This work of saving human lives is serious and calls for the earnest cooperation of all persons.
8. Alcohol and deep water do not mix. An intoxicated person endangers his own life as a swimmer and may endanger an entire party if boating.

Aids In Rescue

9. Unless you are an expert life saver, do not go empty-handed to the aid of a person struggling violently. Think first. If a boat is available row out to him. Throw him a rope or extend him a pole if the victim is near enough to the bank. Otherwise swim out to him with a plank or tree limb to clutch. It will keep the victim away from you and support both your heads above water for the tow-in. Remove all outer clothing before attempting a swimming rescue.
10. Non swimmers should never use a canoe. A recent survey showed that 80 per cent of persons who drowned in water-craft accidents were non-swimmers. Occupants in boats should keep seated while under way. Never overload a boat with passengers. If a craft should overturn, always stay with it if it is made of wood, or if it is a metal boat with air chambers. Ignorance of the fact that the boat will float has cost the lives of even good swimmers who attempted to reach shore, but whose strength was not sufficient to make the goal.

7 Suggestions

For Summer Safety

Before starting on your vacation, be sure that you:

1. Instruct tradesmen to discontinue deliveries (accumulated milk bottles or newspapers tell thieves that you are not at home).
2. Fasten all doors and windows, and notify police that your residence will be unoccupied.
3. Inform the post office of your absence so mail won't accumulate in your mail box.
4. Be sure your silverware or other bulk articles are stored in a safe place.
5. Put important papers, jewelry and other valuables in a safe deposit box.
6. Obtain a supply of travelers cheques for paying travel and vacation expenses.
7. Turn off gas, water and electricity.

Government Grant Sought For New School Building

SPECIAL ELECTION CALLED TO VOTE BONDS FOR NEW SCHOOL

Government PWA Grant Will Pay Nearly Half Of All Expenses

Mr. H. F. Jost, president of the Klemme School Board, called a special meeting Monday night for the purpose of considering a petition which was presented to the board asking them to call a special election authorizing the board to issue bonds for the erection of a new school building with the aid of a government grant. The board met on August 18, 1938 for the date of election, notice of which will be found elsewhere in this issue.

An application for PWA funds approved it means that the Federal Government will pay 45 per cent of the total cost of a new school building, including the site, architect, election expense and equipment. In other words if the total cost of a new school building is $100,000 the government will pay $45,000 which amount does not interest and is not required to be paid back. It is an out-right gift with no strings tied to it.

It would be impossible for this district to build a new school without government aid. The taxable valuation of the entire district at present time is $604,000.00 and 5 per cent of the taxable valuation can be assessed for a bond issue, which would amount to $30,200.00. It can readily be understood that to put up an adequate building, say five or ten classrooms now, that the taxable valuation would have to be more than doubled in order to have enough funds on hand to build a new school.

Some $10,000.00 is available at present in the school funds for use in the proposed new building. School funds are in excellent condition here, with no bonded indebtedness and the slight increase in taxes will hardly be noticeable to the government aid being at this time.

It should be clearly understood that the 45 per cent furnished by the government is an out-right GIFT that at no time in the future it have to be paid back by the district. The government is paying out four billion dollars for public works and it must be paid. If Klemme does not get its share, some other town will. Why not get this grant while it is available.

WATER DROWNINGS IN 1ST SIX MONTHS OF 1938 MAR. STATE OF IOWA'S RECORD

Iowa has had over 40 drownings in this year. This figure is too low for a state like Iowa with its numerous swimming pools and supervised beaches. While the number has never been estimated, it is safe to say that Iowa has a high supervised swimming pools and beaches to accommodate every one who cares to swim at the time.

Most drownings are termed accidents and some of them are—in all of them are. Accidents are usually caused by carelessness, so that drownings are due to carelessness. There is no excuse for carelessness. Consequently, there is no excuse for most drownings. Water is in hot weather. For relief from the heat and for outdoor recreation most people think of water. It is too dangerous. One should be blind to the danger of water, though it may be relief from heat or recreation.

SLEEPING SICKNESS IN HORSES HAS APPEARED

Most Cases Appear To Be Mild Form And Can Be Saved By Early Treatment

Sleeping sickness in horses has been reported in numerous communities in northwest Iowa, according to Dr. K. W. Stouder, extension veterinarian of Iowa State College.

The disease so far in this region seems to be in a somewhat milder form than last year, Dr. Stouder says. Horses affected with this milder form are called "mild sleepers," and practically all of these can be saved if they are treated properly in the early stages of the disease.

It is pretty late to attempt to vaccinate now for the disease, Dr. Stouder says. It takes about 6 weeks for the vaccination to become effective, and we are now in the season of the disease. So the thing to do is to watch for horses that act sleepy, drag their feet and are lifeless. When such symptoms appear, call a veterinarian at once.

The disease last year reached its height somewhat later than this, so the disease may still be more serious this year than it has so far appeared. Central and eastern Iowa where few cases were reported last year would be expected to have the highest percentage of cases this year, but not many have been reported yet.

In no case has a horse that was vaccinated contracted the disease to Dr. Stouder's knowledge.

Summer Has It's Dangers, Guard Against Hot Weather

SUMMER HEAT

The extreme heat of the summer of 1936 will long be remembered, for it caused an appallingly large number of deaths in the United States. The summer of 1938 may take the same toll if the temperature should rise to such heights and remain there indefinitely.

There are two conditions arising as a result of exposure to great heat: heat stroke (sometimes known as sunstroke), and heat exhaustion. A brief description of each condition, and the correct treatment, is given below.

Heat stroke may be caused by indoor heat as well as exposure to the sun. The skin of victims of heat stroke is flushed and hot. The body temperature may be as high as 105 to 110 degrees. Breathing is shallow, and the pulse is rapid. Unconsciousness often occurs.

Treatment of heat stroke consists of removing the victim to a cool spot as possible and attempting to reduce his temperature. Place him in a tub of cool water if one is available. If not, apply ice, or cold packs. Medical help should be summoned, so that after-complications may be reduced to a minimum.

In heat exhaustion, an opposite condition prevails. The skin of the victim is cold, pale and clammy, the temperature subnormal. The individual is very weak, and may become unconscious.

Treatment of heat exhaustion is essentially the same as for shock, and is opposed to that for heat stroke. The victim should be kept warm, and hot fluids should be given him by mouth if he is conscious. Stimulants may be necessary.

Both of these conditions may be very serious, and they demand prompt and expert attention. Proper first aid will aid materially in reducing possible after-effects.

SIGHT-SEEING IOWA

One does not need to leave the State of Iowa to enjoy the most scenic, historical, geological, botanical and interesting sights. Iowa, commonly known as a prairie state, possesses more than its share of interesting nature. It has a wealth of varied interests, many of which are unknown to those who have accepted the term "prairie state" as the basis on which to form a mental picture of the state. One can spend an entire vacation within the state's borders and then not see all there is to see and enjoy.

In the northeast corner are the rock formations, wooded hills and valleys with many springs, streams and ice caves; in the northwest the lake region, that great cluster of beautiful waters surrounded with many resorts, playgrounds and good fishing. Southwest and along that famous Missouri River are sights not to be seen anywhere else in the world—the sand, the hills and the flyway of thousands upon thousands of migratory waterfowl. Southeast Iowa presents an entirely different picture. With rolling, brushy land, thousands of acres of forests, walnut, hickory and oak trees, the area is known to game conscious men as ideal quail territory.

Each quarter of the state gives a different picture with many different interests and sights. Yet Iowa possesses more than one-fourth of all first-grade land in the United States. A total of 25,983,110 acres are so classified, which no doubt accounts for the misconception that Iowa is a prairie state.

When outlining a plan for state parks the variance in interests was taken into consideration. Areas rich in nature were set aside that they might be conserved for the benefit of mankind and for those who would enjoy nature as nature is.

BLACK SHEEP

The yellow-bellied woodpecker, commonly called the sapsucker, is the only black sheep of his family. It is a common belief that many woodpeckers, which resemble the yellow-bellied woodpecker, are tree killers. The yellow-bellied is the only one which will suck sap from trees. The rest of his family drills holes, harmlessly in trees. In fact, their drilling is often beneficial, as they are looking for insects.

Farmers Will Learn How To Get Back Process Tax

AAA Question Box

Questions and answers printed below represent authoritative information supplied to the Times by the Iowa State AAA Committee, cooperating with the Hancock County Committee.

Q. How does crop insurance add to farm security?

A. The AAA program, known as the Domestic Allotment and Soil Conservation Act, has as one of its objectives the balancing of production and the consequent leveling out of prices. Crop insurance is an important addition to the agricultural conservation program because it helps to store surpluses from fat years and make them available for lean years. Crop insurance applies only to wheat in 1939. Farmers can insure their wheat against winterkill, drought, insect infestation, plant diseases, and be assured that they will have at least one-half or three-fourths of their normal yield, even though unfortunate circumstances destroy their entire crop. Premiums are paid in wheat or the cash equivalent and loss indemnities are paid either in wheat or cash.

Q. What is meant by the parity or price adjustment payment provided for by Congress in the closing days of the last session?

A. The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 directed the Secretary of Agriculture to make parity payment to the producers of corn, wheat, cotton, rice and tobacco if and when appropriations for this purpose were made by Congress. The object of this legislation is to raise the incomes of the producers of these commodities as nearly equal to parity as possible. In passing the work relief bill, Congress included an amendment providing $212,000,000 for price adjustment payment to farmers cooperating in the AAA farm program.

Q. How will these payments be computed?

A. The size of the payments will be determined according to a formula fixed by law. Exact amounts of payments for the various crops cannot be determined until the size of the crop and the prices which they are bringing are known.

Q. When will these payments be made?

A. The law provides that the payments will be made upon the normal yield of the farm acreage allotment established for the commodity under the 1939 agricultural conservation program. In addition, the payments are conditional upon cooperation in the 1939 program. Payment will be made, therefore, after growers have given proof that they had cooperated in the 1939 program.

LAUGH, CLOWN, LAUGH!

JOSEPH W. LaBINE

Three months ago a spangled circus performers hit sawdust trail amidst promise of the biggest season since. Today, many of them are going to get home without selling a tent.

The circus season has hit high waters; in some parts it flopped altogether.

Scranton, Pa., a few weeks ago, the "Big One," Ringling Brothers, Barnum and Bailey, set its tent in a sea of mud headed back to winter quarters at Sarasota, Fla. Poor attendance and weather was responsible.

This thing wouldn't have happened in the days of old T. Barnum or John Ringling. But it happened this year, for the first time in 54 years; it happened in a recession whose followers typically carry their banners through mud, water, starvation and payless paydays. We recall something about that old bromide, "The show must go on!"

Maybe the performers aren't doing their part, but that isn't likely. The audience is to blame, for circus has won popular approval for more than half a century with the elephants doing the same and the same clowns turning the same somersaults, year after year. Passes, Customs Change.

In the past 20 years have been changes in the entertainment field. "The Perils of Pauline" on the silent screen gave way to talking pictures; chautauqua extended as a popular pastime, because no longer cared for that kind of culture; the radio came along and made provincial America cosmopolitan.

Through it all came the circus, unchanged. Whenever a progress manager suggested adopting a technique there was always someone to object, because the circus is one kind of entertainment that thrives on pure sentiment. It's been a ballyhoo game, a mouthed bag of tricks which anyone knows to be phoney but for that very reason. It's been bigger than the man in checkered suit and derby hat yelling "Right this way!" out of the corner of his mouth, the other being preoccupied by a cigar maybe the audience is to blame for the Ringling recession. The father's getting tired of sitting on a hard bench year after year eating undigestible peanuts watching the elephants. Perhaps America is now revolting against the old-time circus just as it revolted against chautauqua.

They Call It "Collegiate."

You can't make the old time circus trail followers believe that. The "Big One" never hits the ground, veteran circus men will insist that it died because Ringling North tried to modernize the show this year and thereby destroyed its charm.

That's a fruitless argument because John Ringling North, grandson of "Old John" Ringling, insisted he was only trying to regain a bit of the old Ringling touch by arranging new costuming and hanging for the circus this year.

Under the Smaller Tops.

North is a Yale man and there were mutterings last spring that the circus was going collegiate. Perhaps it was collegiate to import a giant gorilla, "Gargantua the Great," and set him up for exhibition in an air-conditioned cage, enclosed in steel bars and shatterproof glass. Perhaps other minor innovations were collegiate. But it will be hard for John Ringling North's critics to put their wagging fingers on the exact reason why his circus failed this year.

Maybe it was the entertainment;

maybe it was the public; maybe it was the management.

Fortunately the Ringling recession has not made itself felt so acutely among the lesser circuses. Probably it's because these smaller units play largely to non-metropolitan audiences who haven't felt bad business conditions so acutely. Certainly there's no drought so far as numbers are concerned; the current season boasts six railroad shows (two of them brand new) and 16 to 20 truck shows. Add to that more than 150 carnivals and hundreds of fair and celebration units, and you have a picture of the 1938 circus field.

Tim McCoy of motion picture fame is reviving the days of the 101 Ranch and Buffalo Bill. Clyde Beatty and his cats frolic with the Cole Brothers circus, which has a second show on the road under the name of Robbins Brothers. Then comes Al G. Barnes-Sells-Floto circus and the Hagenbeck-Wallace show. Most of these are railroad shows with 20- to 30-car trains.

This year's experience in the circus industry only goes to prove you should never count chickens before they hatch. Last April the boys in winter quarters said it was going to be a bigger year than 1929, which somebody is forever dragging out of the closet for purposes of comparison. They looked at the greatest advance demand for bookings since the present crop of sawdust was an acorn, and they looked back on two preceding seasons that were the best in years.

From George A. Hamid of New York, one of the biggest eastern bookers of acts for circuses, fairs, carnivals and celebrations, came reports that the demand for new and unusual acts far exceeded the supply.

"We could book hundreds more if we could find them," he said. "The demand for acts for celebrations, such as those around the Fourth of July, is three times what it was last year."

Circus in Retrospect.

Old P. T. Barnum, were he alive today, might say the industry has become so big and complex that it's collapsing. The man who started out many years ago with a combined museum-menagerie-circus might scoff at the huge institution his successors now tote around so painfully on special trains.

Certainly it's a far cry back to the night of April 22, 1793, when George Washington watched John Bill Ricketts leap through a hoop from the back of his galloping horse, regain his footing and do a dance on the saddle. That was one of the simple joys of a simple people, yet circus showmanship today is substantially the same, merely augmented.

It can be recalled that even in the earlier days the circus was a humbug proposition. P. T. Barnum, an old man when he reached the prime of circus life, chortled with inward glee at being called the "greatest humbug of his time." He knew the value of advertising and was a genius at getting his name in the paper.

It's interesting to speculate what will become of the dainty French equestrienne and the almond-eyed maid from Tokyo, the almost mystic and the rosy-cheeked English athlete, all of them members of the Ringling circus, all of them temporarily out of a job now that the "Big One" has closed shop for the year.

For old followers of the open road this will be a catastrophe. It will be summer, with no circus tent to move night after night, no blaring midway. Just summer with green grass, birds and free air, a phenomenon many of them have never before seen.

This summer you're apt to find some top-rank circus talent filling out the season with smaller shows, anxious to make a living however they can.

And next fall they'll find the road that leads back to winter quarters and home, or wherever they spend the cold months. Many of them will shake their heads and mutter: "Never again—I'm through."

But next spring they'll be around again and somebody will remember the bromide:

"The show must go on!"

Poe's Tale of 'Gold Bug' Is Very Realistic

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

AT THE time Edgar Allan Poe was living at Charleston, S. C., his friend, one Legrand, was living on Sullivan island, just off the mainland. Legrand had long been ill, so that he was attended in his loneliness by Jupiter, a negro servant.

One night in the fall of the year, when Poe was visiting at Legrand's cottage, he found his host greatly excited about a rare scabbard which he had found on the beach. Unfortunately he had lent the specimen to an officer at the nearby army post, but he drew a picture of the bug and handed the drawing to Poe. The latter regarded it a moment, holding it before the light of a blazing fire, and then mentioned that it looked more like a skull than a bug. Legrand became angry and took the paper back, looked at it intently and then dropped into a reverie.

Elizabeth James

A few days later Poe received a summons to come at once to the cottage. At first Legrand appeared preoccupied, then he confided a mysterious plan, stating that they must leave in the late afternoon to carry it out. Poe feared that he was ill, and concurred for the sake of expediency.

Soon they were in a desolate place where the wasteland had never been reclaimed. Legrand indicated the route and Jupiter cut the path through the luxuriant undergrowth. Presently a gigantic tree appeared.

Treasure Discovered.

Legrand gave his orders: Jupiter was to climb the gigantic tree, to count the limbs, and to go out as far as he could on the seventh limb. Some time elapsed for the climbing then Jupiter yelled in a lusty style: "Here's a skull!"

Legrand smiled with satisfaction. "Now drop the bug down through the left eye!"

Explanations were necessary to indicate the left eye, but presently the gold bug slowly descended. Legrand became more eager. He made certain calculations, marked off 50 feet, drove a stake, and began to dig. The three men dug for two hours, but found nothing.

"Jupiter, I'll kill you!" cried Legrand suddenly. "Which way was that skull facing?"

The skull was facing the tree, so the bug had indeed been put through the wrong eye. The entire calculation had to be repeated. When the digging had gone on apace the second time, a metallic sound rang out

PIONEERING AUTHOR

The temptation is to write the column about the author and the box about the story. Poe is among the enigmatical writers of America. His literary position is three fold. He originated the analytical story, known to us as the detective story; he ranks high as a literary critic; and he is usually regarded as the greatest poet that our nation has yet produced. Many critics of course do not accept this last evaluation, preferring Walt Whitman.

In the night. Faster they dug, and in the torchlight they saw two skeletons. Beneath them was an iron chest. The three men raised the chest, slipped the bands, and with their eyes magnetized, they beheld a king's ransom in gold pieces.

Jupiter was left on guard while the others carried the first load to the cottage. A second trip conveyed all the treasure to Legrand's cottage. Poe and Legrand estimated the wealth at a figure far less than the actual value. As they counted it out, Poe urged Legrand to relate how he had first believed treasure to be there. Legrand summarized his story thus:

Legrand's Explanation.

That first evening beside the fire, he noticed the skull on the paper which Poe returned to him. The skull had not been on the paper when he had drawn the scabbard before. Later he beheld the paper before the fire, heating it cautiously, and saw the picture of a kid slowly appear in one corner. Then a series of numbers became visible, covering the paper. Decoding it, he found directions for locating a tree with a skull on a certain limb, even the number of feet was indicated in the circle. The kid was the signature of Captain Kidd.

"And what was the connection between all this and that infernal scabbard?" that you kept talking about and that you had Jupiter let down through the eye of the skull?" asked Poe.

"I was irritated that you thought me crazy, so I thought I would give you something to think about," Legrand said. "The gold bug has no connection at all; except I was drawing the picture of it, for it is a rare species, when the hot fire called my attention to the fact I held not paper, but parchment!"

Lesson for July 24

GIDEON: FOLLOWING GOD'S PLAN

LESSON TEXT—Judges 7:4-7, 15-23.
GOLDEN TEXT—Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Why Gideon Won.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Gideon's Band.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Lord's Three Hundred.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Wise General.

Who is he? What are his connections? How large an organization does he represent? These are the measures of the greatness of a man which are common in the world. Even in religious circles there is a seeking for the men with "big names" when something is to be done. Our lesson for today reiterates the principle which we all know but which we practice so little, namely, that whatever is accomplished that is really worth while is done by God and that He uses only humble instruments—the "foolish things," the "weak things," the "base things," and "things which are despised" (I Cor. 1:26-29). No flesh is to have any opportunity to glory in His presence. If men who are accounted great by this world are useful to God it is only because they are themselves humble in spirit and service.

Gideon came from an obscure family in a small tribe in Israel—and was astonished when God called him (Judges 6:15). He asked God for several signs to assure him that he was the chosen instrument of the Lord. (read Judges 6), but once he was certain he went forward, nothing doubting.

I. An Insignificant Army (vv. 4-7).

At first thought it seems almost foolish to comment on this story of repeated reductions in the size of Gideon's army in these hectic days when the nations of the earth are living for but one objective—to create a fighting machine bigger and more fully manned than that of any other nation.

But on second thought it is just the time for such comment, because what the nations are doing is a perfect example of the hopeless philosophy of men, while what Gideon did is a presentation of God's way. These notes are being prepared in a city distant from the writer's home, where he is attending a conference of national leaders in a field of great and international importance. A long session just concluded was addressed by a number of brilliant and capable men and women—and the conclusion they reached was that America was a badly befuddled nation, lost without a sense of direction in a wilderness of incoherent and inherently contradictory theories and about to lose its dearly bought freedom, unless someone points the way out. The only solutions offered were bigger and better human programs, and when a suggestion was made that our need might be spiritual the discussion was promptly directed in another direction.

We need the lesson today that it is by the seemingly insignificant Gideon's band that victory is to be obtained. Take courage, ye 300, rid yourselves of the 22,000 fearful ones, let God sift out the 9,700 who are not alert to the danger of the enemy, and then, under some Gideon who is obedient to the command of God, go forward to victory. You are the hope, and the only hope, of our nation. Do not fail God in this crucial hour.

II. Obedience to God's Command (vv. 15-23).

After the Lord had encouraged the heart of Gideon by the account of the dream of the Midianite (vv. 8-14), he and his band are sent forward with strange weapons and even stranger instructions.

It is not ours to question "Why?" when God tells us to move forward. When will we learn that He knows more than we do, and that obedience is all we need to render unto Him? "Behold, to obey is better than to sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams" (I Sam. 15:22).

III. The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon (vv. 18, 20).

While some folk err in counting the Lord out and making everything depend on man, there are a few who make the opposite error and become fatalistic in spirit and relatively useless to both God and man—because they hold an improper view of the manner in which the Lord works through human agencies.

A man who objected to soul-winning efforts, and especially personal work, said that he believed "God could save a man if he were alone on the top of the Alps." Of course He could, but God does not ordinarily work that way. It is the "sword of the Lord"—yes, but do not forget that it is "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon." God has graciously condescended to do His work on earth through human agencies. Let us be ready and subservient instruments for His use, but let us at the same time be alert and active in His service. The two are not at all inconsistent, in fact the one whom God chooses to use is usually the one who is already busy about His work.

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

ARE YOUR LIGHTS COURTEOUS?

Perhaps you can see perfectly with your lights, but if they are wrong someone may come head-on into you, and watching him crash your radiator won't lessen the damage a bit! Your lights should be checked to make sure they are not blinding and checked every night to be sure they are both burning. A one-eyed car can cause a wreck very easily. Be sure of your tail-light, too, or you may some time be run into from behind.

THAT "GENERAL FEELING" AGAIN

The recent improvement in security values, after many months of disheartening declines, has been received with mixed sentiment. Under normal conditions, the gains would be regarded as the start of an upward cycle. But under the abnormal conditions prevailing to day, there is a strong and well-grounded fear that the gains will be merely temporary, and that they constitute only a flurry of no real significance.

In other words, what the country lacks today is confidence. That "general feeling" of uncertainty and worry is as strong as it ever was, and perhaps stronger. Millions of people feel much as if they were living above a volcano that might erupt at any moment. There is no stability. And to say this sentiment is unjustified, as some of the politicians do, is claptrap.

The tax problem has barely been touched. The national debt, in spite of past promises to reduce it, soars to new record after new record. More labor troubles are imminent. The government, instead of encouraging productive private business, has continued with its inimical policies, and it threatens to go further into business on its own hook, at the expense of existing private investments. The chaotic political situation is a thorn in the side of industry and investment.

No one expects such problems as these to be solved at once. But if an honest start were made to deal with them, there would be an amazing restoration of confidence. If government actually cooperated with business—if government put into effect a plan for gradually reducing the national debt—if government gave the investor assurance his savings would not be destroyed by government itself—we would be on the way to stability.

And then improvement in security values or in industrial production or in other economic matters, would be greeted with faith and optimism, investment of capital and "real" jobs.

SAVED BY A THREAD

It sounds incredible—but at least once in recent years a good-sized American city was saved by a thread!

The thread in this case was that of fire-hydrant coupling. A great fire started in the city, and soon spread beyond control of the local department. Help was summoned from another city a few miles away. The needed equipment arrived, attached its hoses to the hydrants and the city was saved.

Here is where the thread comes in. A comparatively short time before, the city struck by fire had changed its couplings to the standard size. Had it not done this, the out-of-town equipment could not have used its hydrants, would have had no water supply, and so would have been worthless. And the probability is that the city would have been destroyed.

This is an example of a little-known but immensely valuable work that is pursued by the fire insurance industry, through the National Board of Fire Underwriters. It seeks to have all communities use standard equipment, couplings, etc. And it has met with noteworthy success.

I can't vouch for the truth of the story, but I gather that a local young lady went to Clear Lake for a swim one evening. She checked her clothing at the bath house and after the swim again secured her duds. Somehow or other the item of one dress was missing and a great deal of arguing failed to convince the person in charge of the checking counter that she had a dress on when she came to the beach. The result was that the young lady had to make the journey home clad in her slip! The dress is still missing.

For good measure the proprietor threw in three life-saver seat cushions. During the course of time the cushions became wet and were sat on to boot. Came the time to return to the dock. The proprietor took one look at the sat-upon cushions. . . declared sitting on them when wet ruined them. Assessed Orville three bucks for the cushions! What a system! To make Herman Paul, John Day and Bill Keraus and the democrats around here feel better since they heard those lashing speeches from Des Moines the other day, I pass along the following story which I found in a newspaper clipping from way back in the 80's. Here 'tis.

"This is too good to be lost. The hobo who comes into the newspaper office and asks for exchanges has a new explanation for the use of them. When asked if he wanted the old papers in order to read the society notes or in order to locate the bathhouse, he said: 'Naw, railroads are so dirty that we want to use 'em on the floor to keep our clothes clean, see? Give me Republican sheets if you got any. They are softer, the arguments aint so solid and de facts aint de cold kind wot knocks you silly, and de points don't stick out enough to hurt, see? It's just like settin' on a 'numatic bed, dere's so much wind in 'em.'"

And here's another joke I found that the bachelors around Klemme are invited to ponder over:

"An eastern editor recently got into trouble by marrying two wives. A western editor admits that he got into trouble by marrying just one. A northern editor says he got into trouble by merely promising to marry—and not making good. But a southern editor tops the list by admitting that his troubles came when he was found in the company of another man's wife."

I think the most interesting thing on the school secretary's annual report published in the Times last week was the one line near the bottom which says "NO BONDED INDEBTEDNESS." The Klemme Independent School District has a clean slate and is certainly in a position now to talk new school. Most school districts in the state that put up new buildings were still in debt. Klemme can start from scratch when it comes to putting up a new school and it can be done without any noticeable increase in the tax levy.

FISHING IS GOOD

Iowa is continuing to rise in the ranks of good fishing states, if accounts of good catches are any indication.

Some of the "whoppers" recently taken in Iowa include a nine pound well-eyer pike caught at Clear Lake by L J Cook of Mason City. The fish was 32 inches long and 16 inches in girth. Ralph Horton, Mason City, landed a 11 1/2 pound northern pike from Clear Lake. It measured 37 inches long.

A 41 inch northern pike weighing 14 1/2 pounds caught at Clear Lake by Dr G W Cady and his son Jerry of Clear Lake, gave the fishermen a real "tussle." It took 25 minutes to land the "big one."

Mr and Mrs Neal Larson and Dale Butts, all of Clear Lake, fishing from one boat, caught a string of 25 wall-eyes and northern pike in one day's outing. The largest was a seven pound northern.

Sunfish and crappies were "hitting" good according to reports. Strings of 18, 12 and 10 sunfish were reported, while one fisherman accounted for 10 pike, 4 bass, 2 crappies and two silver bass.

Five fishermen reported their total catch for one day as 18 crappies, 12 silver bass and 2 wall-eyed pike.

Trout fishing continues good with a 6 pound 12 ounce German brown trout as the largest reported caught by Lyle D. Smith of Charles City. The fish was caught in Spring Creek in Mitchell county. Smith said the trout was 25 1/4 inches long and 15 1/4 inches in girth. Smith also reports taking five trout from these same waters this spring which measured from 15 to 18 inches.

Plenty Of Grasshoppers Are Found In Certain Counties

There are still sufficient grasshoppers in certain sections of Iowa that it would be wise to watch new alfalfa seedlings and second crops of alfalfa and the edge of corn fields, warns Dr. Carl J. Drake, state entomologist.

He recently was in southwestern Iowa and found an infestation of about 40 to 50 grasshoppers per square rod in a field near Council Bluffs. He wanted to catch some hoppers to bring back to Iowa State College to study in the insectary and it took two men only about 20 minutes in a field near Denison to catch about 2,000 to 3,000.

No damage was noted to corn fields and the only damage Dr. Drake saw was to new seedlings. He believes that in some cases it will be wise to do some poisoning. In fact he reports that about 1,500 tons of poison have been used by farmers so far this year.

Grasshoppers, Drake says, are reaching maturity much later than last year. Many of the hoppers are still in the nymph stage.

Mowing Pastures Now To Get Rid Of Weeds Is Effective

Mow pastures now if they are weedy.

This is the suggestion of E. P. Sylvester, extension specialist in weed eradication.

Many of the pasture weeds are in bloom now and mowing them while they are in bloom is most detrimental to them. They are in the weakest condition while in bloom. If possible, mow them on a dry hot day.

Continuous and early mowing of pasture weeds will do much to eliminate them, Mr. Sylvester says.

In addition to mowing, he recommends building up a good growth of bluegrass or other pasture crops through the use of manure, fertilizer, legumes and lime if necessary. By building a good sod and continuous mowing, the grass will gradually crowd out the weeds.

It is also essential to not graze the pasture too heavily, for that is harmful to the grass and encourages weeds to replace it.

So Much Ergot In Rye That It Must Be Fed With Care

Ergot in rye is much more abundant than normal this year, plant pathologists at Iowa State College say, and they warn against the possibility of poisoning livestock if large amounts of rye containing ergot are fed.

Ergot forms in the heads as conspicuous, hard, black protusions. It replaces the normal grain. Many of these ergoty kernels may be removed by running the rye through a fanning mill. The rye may then be fed whole or ground with comparative safety, providing it is supplemented with plenty of green feed, sorghum or silage.

WHY SO FAST

The laws governing vehicular traffic in Iowa's state parks and preserves provides that all vehicles shall not travel in excess of fifteen (15) miles per hour. Fifteen miles per hour is very slow when compared to highway traffic. To some it seems unreasonably slow and the law is not observed. Park Custodians are constantly warning drivers about exceeding the speed limits in the state parks. It is their duty to enforce the law, but they have another obligation—that of protecting the park-using public. It is the duty of every Custodian to look out for the safety of every person in the park and to make his visit to the park enjoyable.

Every Iowa state park or preserve is a thing of beauty. There is much to see and it was put there to see and enjoy. This cannot be done from an automobile traveling more than 15 miles per hour.

So when visiting or driving in a state park or preserve, remember the speed limit was placed at 15 miles per hour for good reason, safety of the public, enjoyment of the parks and happiness for all.

Iowa Pioneers Threshed Grain by Horse Power

How many farmers can remember back to the days when this was the way grain was threshed in Iowa? An old-fashioned horse-powered treadmill like this, and several pioneer threshing machines, are among the unusual pieces of historic farm machinery which the Iowa Centennial Commission has assembled for the Pioneer Threshing show which is one of the features of the Centennial State Fair here, Aug. 26-Sept. 2.

One of the old threshers is to be operated each day of the State Fair, to show the younger generation how it "used to be done". Scores of other farm implements of early days, assembled from all parts of the state, are also to be included in the show, officials say.

Electric Charges Used in "Washing" Ceramic Clay, Says a Chemist

Savannah, Ga.—Charges of electricity are being used in novel industrial operations for "washing" undesirable constituents from certain materials and for drying clay for use in making chinaware, scientists attending the Savannah convention of the Electrochemical society learned.

Novel applications of the fact that tiny colloidal particles, of which such substances as clay are made up, carry electric charges lie at the base of the new procedures reported by a Japanese scientist and an Ohio ceramics chemist.

Water with which clay is mixed in order to wash out the sand accompanying it when it is mined can be removed by running the water-and-clay mixture through a special piece of electrical apparatus, Carl E. Curtis of the Simonds Worden White company, Dayton, Ohio, explained.

How Particles Are Removed.

Since clay particles suspended in water have a negative charge they are attracted to and "electroplated" to a positively charged pole and are thus separated from the water suspension. This process leaves a clay product containing only 35 per cent water, which is easily removed. In use abroad, it is compared with the ordinary drying and filtering procedures in wide use in the United States.

Undesirable colloidal particles can be "electro-washed" from a variety of materials by taking advantage of this same fact, that colloidal particles carry an electric charge, Sakuji Komagata, a Japanese government chemical engineer in Tokyo, revealed.

Application of the proper electric charge to the material causes the undesired particles to migrate to an electrically-charged point and thus to be removed from the material. The process has been successfully used in the manufacture of vulcanized fiber, pulp for power cable paper and condenser paper and photographic films and plates.

Rock Formation Told by Crystals in Antarctic

New York.—Grimy greenish-gray rocks, broken from the ice-carved, wind-swept slopes of an extinct volcano in the almost unexplored Raymond Fosdick mountains of Antarctica by Dr. Thomas C. Poulter, senior scientist of the second Byrd Antarctic expedition, may increase our knowledge of how rocks are formed.

Reporting the results of a study of these rocks to the Geological Society of America, Dr. C. N. Fenner, rock expert of the Carnegie Institution's geophysical laboratory, in Washington, finds that old ideas of rock formation need to be reviewed.

Until recently, it was believed that molten rocks deep under the earth's crust resembled basalt, a dark heavy rock, of which the Palisades of the Hudson, the Giant's Causeway in Ireland, the Devil's Postpile in California, and many other famous clifflike structures are made. As these molten rock masses came near the surface, certain compounds in them crystallized as the rock cooled, leaving other mineral compounds molten until further cooling took place, and changing, as cooling went on, the chemical composition of the remaining molten material.

According to this theory, which has received much support, alkaline materials should crystallize first from a molten rock magma, leaving it more acid than before. The rocks from the Antarctic, however, do not follow the theoretical rules of change, suggesting to the geophysicists that laboratory conditions do not duplicate field conditions very closely, and that tests should be made of the rocks themselves and their materials, and not of laboratory specimens under simpler conditions than those existing in nature.

New Secret Oil Devised for Navy and Aviation

Washington.—A new, secret synthetic oil for aviation watches, clocks and naval and airplane instruments was announced at the meetings here of the Horological Institute of America.

The superior qualities at high and low temperatures and for long periods were described by W. C. Trent of the aeronautical instrument section of the National Bureau of Standards. Formula of the oil is still secret and Mr. Trent refused to disclose its composition on advice of the Navy department.

This seems to supply the navy with an oil which can be obtained in large quantities and which will have the superior properties of porpoise jaw oil which is now virtually non-existent in world markets.

Medicinal Plants Now Imported Should Be Grown in America

Omaha, Neb.—American agriculture, seeking new crops to grow, might well consider the production of plants which form the basis of crude drugs and which are now imported to the amount of over $8,000,000 a year, said Dr. Perrin H. Long of the Johns Hopkins university before a meeting of the fourth annual Chemurgic conference here.

Crude licorice from Russia, licorice extract from Spain, ma huang (ephedrine) from China, castor beans from Brazil and tragacanth from Persia; all these are among the important crude drug imports which might be grown in the United States as far as climate and soil are concerned.

Licorice grows as a weed in the Southwest, said Doctor Long, and may have definite commercial possibilities.

Ma huang—ephedrine—is being cultivated in North Dakota at the present time, he pointed out. Whether it will be commercially successful remains to be determined, but the attempt is a noteworthy one of trying to free the United States from foreign factors which influence the importation of this important medical drug.

Drug Importers Worried.

Current conflicts and past disasters have worried the importers of crude drugs. After the 1923 Japanese earthquakes the price of crude menthol doubled. Our supply of ephedrine has been seriously menaced since last August by the Sino-Japanese troubles.

Main disadvantage of American growers of drug plants is that if they use the hand cultivation methods, handed down from the past, and used in foreign countries, the costs of the plant drugs are too high, said Doctor Long. What needs to be done is to have science and industry co-operate and develop machines which can do the cultivation and harvesting job cheaply.

Heat Insulation Makes Home Fine for Insects

Washington.—Making your home more livable by putting in heat insulation may also make it a happy breeding ground for insect pests, government entomologists find. The flour paste which holds asbestos insulation on the pipes furnishes an ideal food for silverfish and slinkers, while wool and hair insulation provides an ideal home for moths and beetles.

Vegetable fibers like cotton, flax, and jute, while they will not nourish moths and beetles, may attract psocids and flour beetles. Insulation made of rock wool, spun glass or crushed mica, on the other hand, containing no organic material of any kind, will not support insect life. Any insects found in mineral insulation have simply used the crevices in it as a convenient hiding place.

Volcano Blowholes Are Valuable Ore Sources

New York.—Blowholes that once conducted volcanic gases, and later were filled with metallic minerals, now are mined for their valuable contents.

Ore deposits like the rich Cananea, Sonora, mines in Mexico, the "Patch" at Central City, Colo., and the Espiritu Santo mine in Panama, were formed in this way. Gases, boring their way upward, created the hole in the overlying rock, and at a later date solutions brought in minerals, depositing them in the cracks and crevices of the loose rock filling the blowhole.

Tree Rings and Floods

Ann Arbor, Mich.—Future floods and droughts may be foreseen and prepared for through a study of growth rings in trees, declares Dr. E. L. Moseley, botanist of Bowling Green, Ohio, who presented his theory before the meeting of the Michigan Academy of Science, Arts, and Letters. Trunks of old trees show groupings of narrow and wide growth rings indicating ninety-year cycles of scanty and abundant rainfall. Doctor Moseley believes that a planning program can be based on this cycle, to prepare for the opposite emergencies of floods and droughts.

Farthest North Farm

Leningrad.—Northernmost duck farm in the world, is the title claimed by Tass for a new bird preserve on Kharlov island in Barents sea, in the arctic. At present it is devoted to wild eider ducks, highly valued for their soft, warm down, but exterminated many years ago over a large part of their former range.

Best Speed of Insects

Washington.—A mile a minute is the fastest an insect has ever been observed to fly over a measured course. This was done by an Australian dragonfly, whose speed over a distance of between 80 and 90 yards was clocked at three seconds, by the well-known New Zealand entomologist, Dr. R. J. T. Hayward.

★ Ginger's Ma's Career
—By Virginia Vale—

TIMES certainly have changed. Miss Vera Dickens of Lynchburg, Va., was May Queen at Randolph-Macon college, and as a result pictures of her appeared in the news reels.

Whereupon Metro offered her a screen test, and possibly a contract. But she wasn't at all sure that she'd accept; said that she wasn't particularly interested in a movie career.

At Universal they're sort of out on a limb. When they sold the "Madame Curie" story rights to Metro, they made a deal which gave them the services of Robert Montgomery, James Stewart and Robert Young, when they had the right stories for these three young men. And time passes, and they don't seem to have yet found the right stories.

Maybe you think it's summer, but the football season is already under way in Hollywood. Paramount is filming its yearly football picture, "Touchdown, Army," with practically the same cast that last year did "Hold 'Em, Navy." Taking one college a year, they can keep going forever at that rate.

Paulette Goddard is taking her career seriously at the moment. She plans to go to the Cape Playhouse, on Cape Cod, in time to appear in "French Without Tears," and it's said that Charlie Chaplin will coach her. And, of course, if the plan should be a great success and be done in New York, with her still in the cast, she wouldn't be at all annoyed.

Virginia Payne, the star of the popular radio serial, "Ma Perkins," has all plans made for her vacation. She wants to go to Alaska and she wants Mrs. Patia Power, Tyrone Power's mother, to go with her. Mrs. Power has agreed to go. The only difficulty is that Miss Payne, after elaborately making plans, may have to stay home. She's not like those lucky radio stars who write their own material, and can just write themselves out of a sketch for a few weeks when they want to go away.

Ginger Rogers' mother has stepped out. She was a newspaper woman way back in the Texas days when Ginger was just a youngster who did the Charleston awfully well. She has always stood behind her talented daughter, helping her along and encouraging her. Now, she feels that it's time for her to make a life for herself. Ginger doesn't need her now, she says. So she packed up and went to New York, with a play, "Funny Man," that needed a producer. She also, though that wasn't generally known, was on a hunt for new talent for the screen.

There are a lot of radio stars who believe that it's the second profession that you follow, not the first one, that brings success. Jack Benny began as a violinist. Burns and Allen were tap dancers. Lum and Abner were blackface comedians before they adopted the characters of rural storekeepers. Phil Baker was a musician, and Fred Allen was a juggler way back in the beginning.

ODDS AND ENDS—Jean Arthur has been shopping for a collar for a cat, and then having to explain to the salespeople that she really wants it for a baby lynx—the "Wild Bill Hickok" company brought the lynx back from Utah, and Jean wants to keep it for a pet. Lionel Barrymore spends his spare time in the studio designing a yacht compass. . . . And James Stewart has a 16 mm. movie camera, with which he's been snapping everybody in "You Can't Take It With You" . . . John Beal is breaking in a new meerschaum pipe, the gift of Edward Robinson.

The Miracle of Milk

Noted Food Authority Explains Why It Is the Cheapest and Most Nearly Perfect Food

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th Street, New York City.

OF ALL the foods known and used by man, milk is supreme. It is a miracle of perfection—a veritable elixir of life.

Milk has powers possessed by no other food. It builds sturdy bodies for infants; strong bones and sound teeth for growing children; helps to maintain vitality in adults; and to delay the onset of old age.

It contains a greater assortment of nutritive materials than any other single food. It is the foundation of every balanced diet. Considering the services it performs for mankind—from infancy to old age—it is the cheapest food we have.

Milk is so many-sided that I always think of it as the Benjamin Franklin of foods.

It is a vast treasure chest of nutrients—the most complex product of nature's chemistry. It contains nearly every chemical element of the body itself, in proportions adapted for quick and easy assimilation.

Milk fulfills six essential requirements of a perfect diet.

First: It supplies carbohydrate and fat for heat and energy.

Second: It furnishes protein that is suitable for building new tissues and repairing the millions of cells that are worn out daily.

Third: It yields minerals which build bones and teeth and regulate the subtle internal processes of the body.

Fourth: It contains every known vitamin in some degree and is abundantly supplied with the vitamins that are necessary to growth, to the smooth running of the body machine, and to the prevention of many types of infection.

Fifth: It contains water, to act as a solvent, a carrier and regulator.

Sixth: It is easily digestible. This brief summary helps to explain the unique place of milk in nutrition. Think of it! In one food, we find protein of the highest type; carbohydrate and fat; all the vitamins; every one of the minerals demanded by the human body; water; and an easy digestibility that readily changes these ingredients into vigorous life.

The Biggest Food Bargain

We occasionally hear the charge that milk is too high in price—that it is a luxury to afford enough of this master food to supply a quart daily for every child—at least a pint for each adult. That is ridiculous! The cost of milk is much cheaper than the cost of illness. And milk is not a luxury, but an indispensable necessity.

I contend that no homemaker can afford not to buy milk in adequate amounts—that if she desires health, efficiency and longevity for her family, she must provide a sufficient amount of milk before she purchases any other food.

A Food for Children and Adults
Humankind needs milk as the flowers in the garden and the grains in the field need the blessing of rain.

Deprived of milk, children develop a multitude of ills. They become thin and weak; their resistance is low; they fall easy victims to the germs of disease; there is small hope of their reaching normal manhood and womanhood.

Nor is milk only a food for children. It is likewise essential for adults who desire to live longer, happier, and healthier lives—to fortify their bodies against the assaults of disease—to retain or regain mental and bodily vigor. It is indeed a Fountain of Youth!

Milk for Pep and Power

A quart of milk daily supplies from two-thirds to three-fourths of the total calories required by a year-old child. For a five-year old, it provides about half the day's fuel requirements, and for a ten-year old, one-third. Even a moderately active man could obtain one-fourth of his energy requirements from a quart of this precious fluid. It is also interesting to note that five-eighths cup of milk is equivalent in energy value to one and one-third eggs, or two and one-fourth ounces of lean beef.

A quart of milk yields more than an ounce of pure protein of the highest quality. Moreover, nutrition authorities hold that under normal conditions, it is the most completely digested and absorbed of all food proteins.

Milk for Minerals

As a source of calcium, milk is indispensable. Without milk, it is practically impossible for the body to obtain enough of this captain of the minerals for normal skeletal development.

It has been estimated that when the calcium requirement is met through the use of milk, the need for phosphorus will also be adequately provided.

Though milk is not as good a source of iron as of calcium and phosphorus, the iron is present and in a form that can be easily utilized by the body.

Milk for Vitamins

Milk is so rich in vitamins A and G, that the addition of a quart

Showing which Foods are ACID and ALKALINE of milk daily to a good mixture practically guarantees against deficiency of either of these precious substances which promote growth, help build resistance to disease, prolong the prime of life and help to ward off old age. It also furnishes a considerable amount of vitamin B, which mingles appetite, aids digestion, helps to prevent a nervous disorder.

Milk contains a relatively small amount of vitamin D, but this can be remedied in both bottled and evaporated milk by irradiation. The addition of a vitamin D concentrate. It is less dependable as a source of vitamin C than other vitamins, as the amount naturally contains varies with diet of the cow and is reduced by pasteurization or evaporation. This deficiency is easily made good, however, by adding to diet fresh fruits and fruit juice and raw leafy vegetables.

In Praise of Milk Producers

As milk is man's finest food, men who are occupied with its production are engaged in the world's most important pursuit. They labor to provide the nation with a pure, safe, clean supply of the food that makes life worth while for children and helps prolong life for adults.

Let no one say that milk is expensive. Rather let every homemaker come to realize that a magnificent food would be CHEAP AT ANY PRICE!

Klemme Farmer Uses Combine

A combine at work on the Harry Gibbs farm the fore part of the week attracted attention as it is the only machine of its kind in operation in grain fields in this vicinity. The combines are becoming quite common in southern Iowa, and as far north as Ames, but they are still in the "curiosity stage" in northern Iowa.

AMAZING CASEIN

By JOSEPH W. LaBINE

When you pick up that fountain pen to write a letter tonight, you'll probably touch casein. If you're a billiards enthusiast, the little ball you play with is probably casein. Moreover, casein is responsible for the slick finish of the paper in your favorite magazine.

Amazing casein really isn't an amazing thing. To the milk-and-egg American it's simply milk curd, a by-product of milk which men have often discarded as valueless. But a few years ago smart scientists began seeking commercial applications for it; their accomplishments to date make an amazing story.

If you look up casein in the dictionary it will probably tell you it's an organic compound allied to albumin, found in milks of all kinds. The production is 3 per cent and it separates from the milk as curd, which is usually used for making cheese. And cheese is made from skimmed milk, all pressed, is nearly pure regulated casein.

It's hard to believe that man can make cheese and fountain pen barrels out of the same product.

But that's only part of the story. Imagine making wool cloth out of casein.

This latest conquest in the commercial application of casein hails from Italy, where the production of artificial wool from cow's milk has gone far beyond the experimental stage; so far, in fact, that the great Viscosa rayon plant at Milan is building a huge addition to its factory for the production of this artificial fabric on a commercial scale.

Man Copies Nature.

It's incredible that artificial wool and a very fine grade of wool, at least, can be made from milk. But we have only to reflect that the newborn lamb that depends for sustenance entirely upon its mother ewe, constantly producing the wool on its little body from its mother's milk.

So the scientists who perfected this process have only been attempting to simulate a process which nature has been carrying on for millions of years. They've found that cow's milk, goat's milk, sheep's milk, and no doubt other milks, are satisfactory for making wool fabrics. And the process has been perfected to such an extent that the finished product gives a result very close to the actual natural wool, chemically and to the touch.

This development is remarkably interesting, but it need not cause American sheep raisers to quake in their boots. Although science has found a way to speed up the wool growing process, the method will always be complicated. Yet its success may equal that of rayon, an artificial fabric which has assumed an important position during the past 10 years.

The new wool cloth made from milk casein comes in all colors and patterns, in different weights, and is much less expensive than ordinary wool. It has an advantage over natural wool in that it does not shrink and for this reason Italy is making it into soldier's uniforms, underwear and hosiery.

Fashion models in Italy show the very latest styles in this new cloth. See a shop window filled with models clad in gay, outgoing sweaters and sport suits, all made from cow's milk, is to be convinced against one's own convictions that such a thing is possible.

Good to the Last Drop.

The modern dairyman wastes very little from each gallon of milk which farmers deliver to the door. At the Italian wool plant, for example, milk is separated from the butter, so butter is one of the by-products of wool manufacture. Casein is another by-product; its acidity is neutralized and it is fed to pigs. Each 26 gallons of milk produces about 10 pounds of butter and 7½ pounds of dry casein. In wool manufacture, dry casein produces approximately its own weight in artificial wool, with little waste.

American milk is not used so thoroughly, yet few nations can boast higher milk production than the United States. Thus the possibilities for American adoption of the artificial wool process are tremendous. Recent department of agriculture figures show that milk surpluses this year hit a new June 1 high, causing dairy prices to drop to the lowest level in four years.

Resulted From Necessity.

The discovery of milk wool is only two years old. Inventions which had not passed beyond the laboratory stage had been made before that time, but the object had been to produce artificially a product replacing silk, the most highly considered fabric of animal origin. Experience has shown, however, that artificial silk is best produced of cellulose, a material of plant origin.

The process itself takes place in a plant closely resembling a creamery. Milk is weighed and passed through a heater into a skimming machine. Here the cream is separated from the milk and by means of a sterilizing and refrigerating apparatus is immersed in an acidification vat, after which it is put into a mixing churn and moulded into pats of butter.

The skimmed milk then passes into a curdling boiler where it is treated by special chemical products so that there is a coagulation of the casein which is found in suspension in the milk. The casein thus collected is sent into the press filter where the whey is eliminated.

The masses of casein are sent to the curdling boiler to be washed. The product is then dried and

A few days ago the above frock looked very much like 63 quarts of cow's milk; in fact, it was just that. Today it's a complete knitted wool dress in plain brown color. Very chic, what?

In the mixer the casein undergoes a dissolving process with chemical reagents and is sent on to the maturing and filtering tanks. Through the spinning machine the casein now takes on the consistency of filaments which are first cut, then washed, then dried. The raw material is then finished and ready for that first transformation which is common to all fibers.

Western Newspaper Union.

Ton after ton of cow's milk is needed daily to keep the great Viscosa plant running at full capacity to turn out 10 tons of artificial wool. Today, more than ever before, the lowly cow assumes an important rank in the world's economic picture as provider of both health and warmth: milk and clothing.

Star Dust

★ 'Scarlett' at Last ★ Daddy of Sound ★ Delayed Honeymoon

—By Virginia Vale—

THE announcement that Norma Shearer will play "Scarlett O'Hara" in "Gone With the Wind" stirred up a tempest in a teapot that is still raging.

Certainly, on the face of things, it does not seem to be the type of role that she does best. "She has no southern accent naturally, so whatever she says will sound phoney," declare the Miriam Hopkins supporters; "She's too sweet and mild," wail the people who wanted Bette Davis to have the part.

But nobody's complaining because Clark Gable is to play "Rhett Butler", that role was made for him from the beginning.

Robert Taylor's New York fans were numerous but not unruly when he spent a short vacation in the city recently. This time he managed to arrive and leave places without having his shirt or his shoes torn off. No strange girls were discovered hidden in his suite at the hotel, waiting for autographs. Fans just gathered in crowds outside his hotel and waited for him to appear. And he endeared himself to them by refusing to duck in and out by the freight entrance, and so disappointed them. Furthermore, he did what few movie stars do: came out and said quite frankly that, if the fans didn't gather to see him, he'd know that he was slipping.

When August Baron died a little while ago the public, in general, paid little attention to the fact. Few people had ever heard of him. Yet he was the first man to take out patents on talking pictures. He did it in 1896 and 1900, but the patents expired before he could get backing. He died, penniless and blind, at the age of eighty-three, without ever having seen a talking picture.

Richard Cromwell has learned to expect practical jokes in the movie studios where he's worked, but he wasn't prepared—until recently—to encounter them in the radio world as well. He plays "Kit Marshall" in "Those We Love," and takes it pretty seriously, so when he received a phone call one day recently, telling him that the rehearsal would be held an hour earlier than usual, he saw to it that he got there in plenty of time.

And then he sat there for one solid hour, waiting for the rest of the cast to show up. Donald Woods, who's also in the serial, was responsible.

The Don Ameches were married six years ago, and at the time Don promised his wife a honeymoon in Europe. They started on it just after Don finished his last broadcast of the current season, July 3—flew from Hollywood to New York and set sail on the Queen Mary. And they've planned a honeymoon worth waiting six years for.

Don Ameche

Radio, like every other industry, has its slang—here's a bit of it, as submitted by Mark Warnow, musical director at Columbia Broadcasting studios. Cliff-hanger—an adventure serial. Clientitis—sponsor trouble. Fairy godfather—easy-going sponsor. Dawn patrol—early morning broadcasting. Putty blower—trombone. Wood pile—xylophone. Lockjaw—singer with a tired voice. Spieler—announcer.

ODDS AND ENDS—Walter Wanger has announced that he's through with "difficult" actresses; he's let Sylvia Sydney and Madeleine Carroll go, and is grooming Louise Platt for stardom. In "The Lady and the Cowboy" David Niven will play opposite Merle Oberon, to whom his engagement was reported a year or so ago—maybe just for publicity purposes. Miss Oberon, incidentally, has a grand scheme for dressing simply and well; sweaters and skirts for daytime, white evening gowns at night; she buys them by the dozens. . . . Frosting a Cake for Judges to Sample

A professional cake baker, frosting one of the hundreds of cakes which were made up in the Experimental Kitchen Laboratory, maintained by C. Houston Goudiss in New York City, in the course of selecting the winners in his recent Cake Recipe Contest.

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

NATURALLY, I am accustomed to seeing exhibits of delicious and interesting foods in the Experimental Kitchen Laboratory that I maintain in New York City. But in all the years of its existence, it has never been a busier nor a more inviting place than during the last few weeks when the home economists on my staff have been busily testing and judging the many fine cake recipes submitted by readers of this paper in our recent Cake Recipe Contest.

Imagine, if you can, a big cheerful and colorful kitchen filled with long tables upon which row after row of handsome cakes were arranged—proudly testifying to the skill of the homemakers who cherish the recipes from which they were made.

Every Type of Cake Entered.

A whole tableful of white cakes, with and without icing. Chocolate and cocoa cakes of every possible type. All manner of cakes, fragrant and delicious—spice, ice cream, honey, caramel, maple syrup, nut, date, pineapple, orange, lemon, butterscotch, jam, banana, raisin, oatmeal, coconut and marble cakes. Cakes baked in long sheets, square cakes, round cakes, layer cakes. Old-fashioned cakes from grandmothers' recipe books. Very modern and up-to-date cakes. And even one that was said to have been a favorite with General Robert E. Lee. I've never seen anything to compare with the collection, even at the biggest State Fair!

Do you wonder that the home economists on my staff required several weeks to pick the winners? For with such a wealth of exceptional cakes from which to choose, selecting those for top honors, was indeed difficult.

The cake bakers were trained for their work. They followed the recipes precisely. They measured accurately. They checked oven temperatures.

The scoring system was highly scientific. And we can say with conviction that no matter how close the race, the winners definitely outpointed even their closest rivals.

First Prize Winner.

The first prize of $25.00 went to Mrs. D. F. Kelly, 1004 Charles St., Whitewater, Wis.

Third Prize Winners.

Mrs. T. H. Fjone, Flaxville, Mont.; Mrs. Lester Ralston, 127 South Judd St., Sioux City, Iowa; Mrs. Harry A. Kramer, 16 Marin Road, Manor, Calif.; Mrs. F. D. McDonald, Route 1, Amherst, Texas; Vera Tygar, Commodore, Pa.; Mrs. George Ahlborn, R. D. No. 1, Mt. Pleasant, Pa.; Mrs. B. A. Robinson, Box 578, Emmett, Idaho; Jean Guthrie, 4712 Campbell St., Kansas City, Mo.; Mrs. Walter Richter, Bonduel, Wis.; Mrs. P. C. Blakely, Alden, Mich.

Honorable Mention.

Emogene Williams, Damon, Texas; Mrs. Simon Moen, Norma, N. D.; Mrs. Dick Collins, Masonville, Iowa; Mrs. B. F. Herman, Box 1118, Crosby, Miss.; Mrs. Paul Lorenz, P. O. Peterson, Box 335, Amherst, Wis.; Mrs. Cecil Skinner, Bedford, Wyo.; Mrs. Joe Furrance, 317 West Twentieth St., South Sioux City, Neb.

My thanks and my compliments to every homemaker who submitted a recipe. I only regret that everyone who submitted a recipe could not win a prize.

How Women in Their 40's Can Attract Men

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 38 to 42), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells.

Get more fresh air, 8 hrs. sleep and if you need a good general system tonic take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vivacity to enjoy life and, assist calming jittery nerves and disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life. WELL WORTH TRYING!

ARE TRAFFIC VIOLATORS CRIMINALS?
A traffic judge, who has had hundreds of reckless, drunken and speeding drivers before him in court, recently asked: "Are traffic violators criminals?" Without answering himself, he pointed out that careless drivers destroy more property and kill and injure more persons than the combined efforts of all murders and hold-up men and gangsters in the country.
Many auto clubs bar from membership drivers who have had bad records. There's a growing feeling that habitually careless drivers who cause death and injury are not far from the criminal classification.
A coroner's jury in a southern state recently decided that a man first believed to be a murder victim was killed by a hit-and-run driver. Is there much difference?

SPRAY FOR SECOND BROOD OF CODLING MOTHS BY AUG. 1ST
Second brood codling moth "worms" will begin hatching and gnawing into Hancock county's apple crop within the next weeks unless the trees are sprayed predicts County Agent T. C. Petersen.
The maximum protection, apple trees should be sprayed by August 1st, since moths hatched from the first brood will have laid most of their eggs by that time.
A lime-sulfur spray of 1 1/2 quarts of liquid lime sulfur, 2 1/2 pounds of hydrated lime and 1 1/2 pounds of lead arsenate to 50 gallons of water is recommended.
When the weather is unusually hot, a mixture of 2 pounds of copper sulfate, 3 pounds of hydrated lime and 1 1/2 pounds of lead arsenate to 50 gallons of water makes a good spray.
If a large number of "worms" are entering the fruit on August 1st, a second spray within 10 days after the first spray is advisable.

Collecting Insects Is Inexpensive Hobby And Quite Amusing

WASHINGTON. — You don't need to spend a lot of money to have a lot of fun cultivating a scientific hobby, at least in its beginning stages. If the collecting fever really takes hold, you'll probably empty your pocketbook on your hobby, anyway, but you can take a trial spin at it for next to nothing.

If the notion of making a collection of insects appeals to you, for example, you don't even need to buy a butterfly net. If you are handy with tools you can make one for yourself, but in some ways the beginner at "bug-hunting" may even be better off without a net.

Butterflies, for all their attractiveness, are not the best insects to begin on. They are fragile and hard to handle, and they take up a lot of room. The same may be said for dragonflies, crane flies and many other insects that require a net for their capture.

Beetles Almost Ideal.

Beetles are almost an ideal group for starting-out purposes. They can be caught in the fingers as they lumber along the ground or cling to trees and bushes. They can be found by turning over sticks and stones in the woods, or by digging the bark off rotten logs with a stout knife or the point of a trowel. They don't get messy in handling, and they don't take up much room in your trays or boxes.

Several other groups of insects offer somewhat the same advantages. You might prefer to try scooping up waterbugs, or nabbing grasshoppers, katydids and crickets, or even capturing the wild cockroaches of the woods, which are quite different animals from the pests that haunt our houses.

Killing Bottle Necessary.

One piece of equipment is necessary for any kind of insect collecting. This is a killing bottle. It is cruel to carry captive insects around alive, and to stick pins through them without first humanely killing them is not to be thought of. So every collector carries a wide-mouthed bottle with a tight stopper, into which he puts his insects, along with some chemical whose fumes are quickly lethal to insect life.

Common pins aren't the best things for pinning out insects but they'll do all right, especially if you try to get thin ones. Don't pin your beetle exactly in the middle, between his two wing-covers, but thrust the pin through one of these hard, shell-like halves; it will hold better there.

You don't need expensive special boxes or trays for your collection. Cigar boxes will do well enough, for a start.

Small City Families Likely to Economize by Not Consulting Doctor

WASHINGTON.—Families living in small midwestern cities "are more likely to economize by not seeing the dentist, the oculist—or even the doctor—than by not buying supplies for the family medicine chest, when funds run low."

This is the conclusion of a survey of medical expenditures made under the direction of Dr. Louise Stanley, chief of the bureau of home economics of the department of agriculture.

The survey was made of 3,118 native white non-relief families living in the following representative cities: Lincoln, Ill.; Boone, Iowa; Columbia and Moberly, Mo.; Mount Vernon and New Philadelphia, Ohio; and Beaver Dam, Wis.

Families with low incomes consult doctors more often than dentists and almost never see oculists. Most of them, however, reported spending some money for medicines and drugs during a 12-month period of 1935-1936. The amounts spent for medicine ranged from $6 to $21 per family per year at the different income levels.

Not until the family income reached the $500 per year level did the reports show as many as half the families consulting a physician.

Diet for Long Life

PHILADELPHIA.—The echidna, or Australian spiny anteater, in the Philadelphia zoo, has established a record for longevity among animals of its kind. Keepers ascribe its survival for 35 years to two things: a dark box in which to sleep during the daytime, and a steady daily diet of one raw egg, one pint of milk, and one teaspoonful of lime water.

Pasteurize Goat's Milk

MALTA.—Island authorities at this British Mediterranean naval base have turned to systematic pasteurization of goat's milk in an effort to wipe out Malta fever.

'Sun Power' Problem To Be Studied by Scientists of M. I. T.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS.—Methods of creating "sun power" by converting the tremendous amount of solar energy into some form in which man can use it as a source of power will be the goal of a comprehensive program of chemical, electrical and mechanical research to be undertaken at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Enabled by a $647,700 gift from Dr. Godfrey L. Cabot of Boston, the research will be devoted specifically to a search for direct means of converting the sun's radiant energy into useful power or storing such energy for future use. Under the terms of the gift the income from the fund must be used in these studies for at least 50 years, after which it may be diverted to other purposes at the discretion of the Institute's corporation.

While scientists at Technology will concentrate on direct physical and chemical methods of using solar energy, research workers at Harvard university, which received a similar grant from Dr. Cabot last year, are making a pioneering study of the possibilities of speeding up the growth of trees, and thus "streamlining" the conversion of sunlight into forms suitable for human use.

Great Potential Power.

In announcing the gift, Dr. Karl T. Compton, M. I. T. president, commented on the enormous potential power of solar energy, pointing out that heat from the sun reaches the earth in the temperate zones at an average rate of approximately 4,000,000 calories per square yard daily. In the three months of greatest sunshine an acre of land, he estimated, receives directly from the sun an amount of heat equivalent to that which would be produced by the burning of about 250 tons of first-class coal.

"The store of energy in our familiar fuels, while great, is not inexhaustible," he continued, in pointing out the importance of such research.

A primary object of the project will be to determine whether use of solar energy is economically feasible and practical. Solar energy devices already proposed and studied elsewhere will be evaluated with this point of view in mind. The second aspect will consider chiefly the feasibility of developing new conversion equipment using phenomena now under study which hold promise of ultimately being useful in the solution of this problem.

Corn's Vitamin Content May Be Increased by Scientific Breeding

ITHACA, N. Y.—Breeding for increased content is indicated as a definite possibility by experiments on corn reported by Drs. L. F. Randolph and David B. Hand of Cornell university.

The vitamin A content of corn and other vegetables depends on the amount present of certain yellow pigments, the carotenoids. Amount of the carotenoids in turn depends on the hereditary makeup of the plant; it is a Mendelian trait.

Doctors Randolph and Hand bred strains of yellow corn to increase the number of chromosomes in each cell, bearing the hereditary units or genes. When they doubled the chromosome numbers (and thereby doubled the gene numbers) they obtained marked increases in the vitamin A activity.

Giant Race Lived in Swamps of the Coal Age

COLOGNE, GERMANY.—A race of giants that lived in the Coal age swamps is described by Dr. P. Guthorff of the Saarbrücken School of Mines. They were creatures with jointed bodies like the lobsters and insects of today, and apparently were evolutionally midway between the lobster tribe and "thousand-leggers" or myriapods.

But they were very much bigger than any modern lobster or thousand-legged. None of the fossils thus far found is entire, but from the fragmentary remains Dr. Guthorff estimates a three-foot length as not uncommon; and one specimen from a coal bed in the Netherlands appears to have been five or six feet long in life.

This particular type of fossil has never been found in coal beds outside of Europe. It bears the scientific name Arthropleura, and it lived about 250,000,000 years ago.

Glass Cracks Grow

BERLIN.—High speed motion pictures, taken at the rate of 200,000 exposures a second, have shown that cracks in glass from the instant of impact grow in all directions from the point of impact at the rate of more than 1,500 meters per second.

'Robin Hood' Is Favorite of Children

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

PERHAPS the first time that you met Robin Hood and his Merry Men, you were a little child and were in bed with the measles. Perhaps your mother sat by the window where a ray of light permitted her to read to you from the stories of Robin Hood. Anyway, you certainly remember Robin's fight with Little John.

One summer's day Robin Hood and his Merry Men stopped their journey in the forest to rest in the shade. Their leader set out to rove the woods alone, taking his horn which he used to summon his men should he need them.

Going along gayly Robin found himself over a rushing river on a narrow log bridge, face to face with a man seven feet tall. Hot words passed between them for neither would go back to allow the other to pass first. Pulling an arrow from his sheaf and placing it to his long bow, Robin prepared to end this argument, but the tall man taunted him with the name of coward.

"Do you not see me unarmed except for a staff?" cried his opponent. "And yet you would use your bow."

Robin left the bridge and cut himself a stout cudgel from a tree. Returning he faced the tall man and they began to fight, both balancing on the narrow log.

Robin Hood Falls.

A blow from Robin's staff seemed to shiver the bones of the other, but a quick stroke nearly cracked the crown of Robin's head. Thus they were struggling, hand to hand, when a dextrous stroke from the stranger tumbled Robin Hood into the water. Pulling himself from the river by the overhanging boughs of a bush, Robin gave a mighty blast on his horn. Running at top speed came his band of Merry Men in their liveried suits of green. Seeing their leader wet from head to foot, they asked the reason, and when Robin told them of the fight they beset the stranger to give him a ducking.

"Stop!" cried Robin Hood. "If this brave man will join us, he can become a member of the Merry Men!"

Shouts greeted these words, and the tall man agreed to accept this

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

The authors of the Robin Hood stories are unknown as individuals but much can be deducted about them as a group. They hated the rich Normans who had taken the best of everything in England, they hated many of the churchmen who taxed the people excessively in the name of religion. Robin Hood was their champion for he robbed the rich and helped the poor. What King Arthur was to the nobility, Robin Hood was to the poor.

The deeds of Robin Hood have come down to us in ballads which were told and sung by the evening camp fires, long before the people could read or write.

invitation, having heard much of Robin Hood's men.

"We must have a feast in his honor," they cried and set about preparing the venison and wines.

And so it was that on a summer's day in their secret haunt in Sherwood Forest, Robin and his Merry Men took Little John to be one of their band.

Another day Robin Hood heard of an archery tournament which he very much wished to win. Wearing a disguise he entered the contest and was soon left with only one opponent, a slender youth who shot with grace and skill. When the last round came, Robin stepped back to give first place to his opponent, who in turn gave way to Robin Hood. Then the outlaw saw that the hands of his opponent were trembling. So Robin Hood stepped to the mark and shot his arrows, making a perfect score. The youth missed the center of the target by a small margin.

It was then time to remove disguises. When the villagers saw Robin Hood they were astonished for they knew that the Sheriff of Nottingham was searching for him. At this very moment the Sheriff dashed up on his horse and a free-for-all fight began. The villagers helped Robin Hood for they loved him as a hero. In the confusion Robin noticed the slender youth beside him, fighting in his defense.

When the fight was over, Robin sought out the youth and inquired why he had fought thus in his behalf. The youth removed his disguise and his cap; beautiful long hair fell to his shoulders. Robin gasped, for the slender youth was really Maid Marian, Robin's sweetheart.

Robin Hood and his sweetheart rode away together, leaving the villagers smiling.

Wide Brim Hat With Chic Silk Print

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A word about black and pink. As the season advances costume after costume favors this combination. It gives a pretty effect indeed, when the dress of pink and black print is enhanced with pink costume jewelry, perhaps adding a girdle sash of soft pink suede with possibly a pink suede bolero.

WINSOME trock of chic silk print that makes you look your prettiest, hat big of brim that brings romance into the picture, it's the twosome that "does something for you" and it's exactly the type costume that is holding the spotlight in the midsummer fashion scene.

Special emphasis is being placed on the vogue of picturesque hats that have a sentimental air that tunes in charmingly with the witchery of a brightly colorful, flattering print gown. Which goes to show that there is a trend to dress in lovely-lady fashion. You will find more and more as the summer comes on that the "be pretty" mood prevails throughout the mode.

The trio of charming summer costumes illustrated is convincing as to the "prettiness" of current fashions. The dress to the right interprets a new version of the crinoline in black and pink print silk crepe. It is shirred at each side to give moderate skirt fullness in front with a slim back line. The box shoulders emphasize smallness of waistline, a feature especially indicated in the newer dresses. Wear black accents with this gown for town and change to touches of pink when you go to your country club. The black hair hat posed far back on the head and flaring far up in front is a foremost millinery fashion. Even the new white felt tailored shapes have this upward off-face movement.

ACCENTS OF SUEDE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Now that designers have sensed the vast possibilities suede offers to the fashion field and now that suede has been so scientifically treated that it is rendered thoroughly fabriclike, there's just no end to the exciting things being done with it. For instance, this lovely silk print summer costume, posed by Lucille Ball, radio player, is greatly enhanced with a girdle sash of grape colored suede with streamers of matching suede on the attractive wide-brim hat.

Milliners Are Featuring

Button Bonnets Just Now

Milliners are featuring "button bonnets" this season. They are as fashionable for "big sisters" to wear as they are for the tiny members of the family. They are made of pique, sharkskin, printed linens and such. While the new button bonnets are as pretty as a picture and as chic as can be, they are something more than mere eye teasers for they are practical to the nth degree, in that they are made to unbutton at will so as to lay out perfectly flat. Which means you can launder them easily and when buttoned back into shape they look like brand new millinery. Flatten them out by unbuttoning and they pack without taking up room—ideal for week-end trips.

STRAPLESS BRA IS GOOD STYLE NEWS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here is good news, it's about the strapless brassiere designed to wear with the very fashionable strapless evening gown. It is made of net or lace with drawstring at the top and is boned just enough to keep it up without the aid of straps over the shoulders. Solves the problem of what to wear under that transparent blouse or dress in the daytime where one must do away with unsightly straps to look well groomed. Try the new strapless bra under your costume slip in the daytime and you will be delighted at the nicety and neatness it affords.

White for "Undies" Latest

On Calendar of Fashions

If you are casting about for "undies" that express the ultimate in chic, be style-alert by asking to see the latest creations in white "nighties" and slips or foundation garments and corsetry. A vogue for pure white is down on the calendar of new fashions.

Also there is a sentiment gaining to use fine wash materials, such as choicest of nainsooks and batistes and handkerchief linens, dimities and a whole lot of the quaint, beautiful wash fabrics that again have come into their own.

You will have joyous surprises, too, in the styling of the various garments. For instance a dainty bed-jacket is made of white batiste with vertical rows of embroidery beading with the traditional "baby ribbon" run through and val lace edgings for trim.

White rayon satin corsets and foundations that slenderize one to a finish are also in promise.

Terry Cloth Retains Its

Popularity on the Beach

The introduction of many new cotton fabrics fails to check the popularity of terry cloth when it comes to beach attire. Coats and capes of the toweling continue to be featured, the most striking version being a two-toned striped pattern. Bold contrasts such as bright navy or black with white present the theme to best advantage. Jacket-like blouses that have been dubbed "night shirts" are made of white terry cloth and take the place of longer coats for beach wear.

WILLIAM BRUCKART
PRESS BLDG WASHINGTON, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—President Roosevelt has sent a letter to Chairman Stuart Rice of the central statistical board of the other day, in which he expressed why there is need for "official reports" from individuals and corporations engaged in business. The President's letter is a feeling that, if there are reports as complaints have something ought to be

Mr. Rice's job to find out where, and why, concerns the floods of reports which demands. But how finding out, too, I thought on the job like a bird dog the bush. It did not take me to realize that I had set a task that is likely to Mr. Rice and his staff of perhaps a year to an answer. I learned a thing, however, and that is I am writing about "official reports" at this time.

Generally, at first, I can never in all history has been a condition such as men and women now face, course, within the last few years have had to make reports, too. The reason for this is that the condition is now is that the situation reports. Year after year, after generation, such Presidents and succeeding have added to the functions of the national government. It has gone into new on new obligations, new reports, increased its scope of this and that and the these functions have in more and more reports ordered and required; it has been needed, and, on, bureaucrats have themselves additional and powers. Now, what is a tangled mess, a slimy whose tentacles reach into corner and nook and cranny considering some of the details (which are horrible) because they are so general in nature, it seems to me we can never who is responsible. I did above how succeeding and congresses have ex- functions of government. It takes no stretch of the imagination to conceive what the cost is for a large corporation to handle its official reports to various agencies of the national, state and local governments if that corporation operates, say, over half of the United States. The expense runs into millions upon millions of dollars annually. Who pays? You and I, the consumers.

I have not had access to all of the records required by the department of agriculture because many of them are confidential, but I believe it is safe to say that some fifty-odd reports have to be made respecting every farmer who has signed up in compliance with the crop control laws and the land conservation program. I think the farmer directly involved has from eight to ten of these reports and official documents; the county committee which inspects and reports on him has others; the county agent has still more reports to make—all still involving this one farmer but including others as well—and these are followed by regional and national reports until all totals are entered here in Washington.

Or, at the risk of being too personal in dealing with a national problem, I might cite my own experiences. Mine is what is called a one-man office. That is to say, with the aid of a secretary, I must run my own little business. But even as inconsequential as that office is, consider this situation: I must file an income tax return annually. That return must include an extra statement which covers a general outline of my meager income and the expenses of my office. I must pay ten dollars a year for a "license" which gives me the privilege of writing to earn my living, but I must file a report before I get that license in the District of Columbia. Twice a year, I must file a report of my gross return from my work in the District of Columbia—and pay a tax on that income. Each month, I have to file a report to the District of Columbia employment board, showing how much I pay my secretary, how many hours a week she works and pay a tax which theoretically is saved up and paid to her in case she is unemployed. Each month, also, I am required to file a report with the United States social security board, giving the same information—and pay another unemployment tax. And each three months, I am required to file another report with the social security board which seems to be a report showing that the monthly reports are correct.

It has been my good fortune to have gained a legal education by virtue of four long years of night school, so I have not had to hire a lawyer to help me with my reports. They have been comparatively simple, generally. But that is not the case with a larger business.

Lawyers, however, would be no help in the circumstance that I am now about to relate. A young lady who had served as my secretary several years left my service. When I filed the last monthly report for her name and paid the tax, I attached a letter explaining that she was leaving and that there would be no further reports in her name as far as I was concerned. The letter was written in the hope that the file would be complete.

This incident happened last October. In March, 1938, I received a notice from the board, advising me that I had not paid the tax on the salary of the lady in question for the month of February, 1938. Not a word about the other months from October to February. And if I didn't pay, said the notice, there were penalties, court proceedings, etc. Yes, you guessed it! I threw that notice into the waste basket. Two months later, I had the honor to be visited by an inspector. He was courteous and gentlemanly, but firm. I must pay the tax—not for February, but for December. You can let your own imagination run high, wide and handsome about the results of that visit.

Well, I merely bring out those facts because they show the need for the voters of the country to take some action on their own and quit following blindly the demagoguery of the politicians.

Previously in this column I have written about several corporations which, after filing several thousand reports, have had inspectors visit them to see whether they were complying with the law. Since that time, one of the business men about whom I wrote originally has told me that other inspectors have come to see whether the first crew had complied with the law in making investigations.

Lesson for July 31

SAMSON: STRENGTH AND WEAKNESS

LESSON TEXT—Judges 14:5, 6; 15:11-14; 16:15-21
GOLDEN TEXT—Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might.—Ephesians 6:10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Man Who Wasted His Strength
JUNIOR TOPIC—How Strong Was Samson?

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Who Is Strong?
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Physical Strength and Moral Weakness

There is no more tragic individual among the sons of men than the one who entered upon life with every promise of success, who has lived for a time in favor with God and with man, and then because of moral failure is set aside by God, shunned by man, and ends life as a disappointment and a failure. "And yet such disastrous climaxes of what should have been great and victorious careers lie all about us, and nowhere with such frequency and inexcusableness as among those whom God has called to preach, evangelize, and teach His Word. The saddest tragedy in all the world is a man who once knew the power of the Holy Spirit and who now walks the streets of some great city or is buried in the cottage of an unknown countryside, without power, without work, without joy, without the leading of the Lord. He knows a weariness that labor never gives, for he awakens every morning more tired and weary than when he went to sleep the night before" (Wilbur M. Smith).

The life story of Samson brings us the picture of God's patient and gracious dealing with such a failure, reveals the inexorable law of cause and effect in the moral realm as well as the certainty that the wages of sin not repented of and forsaken is death.

I. Physical Strength and Favor With God (15:5, 6).

Samson had the distinction (given to only one other Old Testament character) of having his birth announced beforehand. He was to be a Nazirite and was to "begin to deliver Israel out of the hand of the Philistines"—a commission which sin kept him from ever finishing. God gave him the marvelous heritage of a strong and healthy body as well as His own blessing upon him for carrying out the Lord's work. The fact that he is named among the heroes of faith in Hebrews indicates that he did have faith in God. Yet his life was a failure.

Samson would have been a great favorite in this athletic age. Let those who worship the body and glorify physical prowess take note that such strength is not sufficient to guarantee success in life, and may indeed be a source of temptation which may lead to spiritual and moral downfall. Those who live for the flesh "shall of the flesh reap corruption" (Gal. 6:8).

II. Moral Weakness and Spiritual Decay (15:11-14).

The portion of the lesson selected for our consideration from Judges 15 gives only an act of prowess on the part of Samson, but the reader will recognize it as one of the many deeds of Samson done as an expression of his uncontrolled sensual nature. Read the entire chapter and it will be evident that here is a man who, while occasionally responding to God's leading, is on the downward path of moral and spiritual decadence.

Scripture is absolutely honest in relating the facts as they are—and here it is not at all an attractive picture. It never is, although the world tries to make it appear to be. A learned audience of university people laughed with evident appreciation at the statement of a professor that "vice is always more interesting than virtue," little realizing that they thus bore testimony to their own attitude toward sin. If the liquor advertisements were honest enough to picture the agony of a drunkard dying of delirium tremens they would present the real truth, but they would sell no "booze."

III. Failure, Darkness, and Death (16:15-21).

Delilah finally betrayed the foolish Samson who apparently had become so sure of himself that he dared to venture anything. The man who was to be strong for God is now in prison, shorn of his strength, blinded by his enemies, and finally he kills himself even as he slays his enemies (16:23-31). Thus he threw away the life that had become to him but a burden and a disgrace.

"Thus he who began never completed his work. The column was broken in the middle. The story ends with a comma and a dash, blistered over by a tear. For the light is turned into darkness, and how great is the darkness" (J. M. Lang).

Now Power Can Defeat God
Be not afraid of sudden fear, neither of the desolation of the wicked, when it cometh. For the Lord shall be thy confidence, and shall keep thy foot from being taken.—Prov. 3:25, 26.

C. Houston Goudiss Offers

Practical Advice on How to Keep Cool With Food

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th Street, New York City.

FROM the standpoint of health, the summer months constitute the most important period of the entire year. They should be used to build stamina and vitality that will fortify your body against disease. But to many people, the warm weather means merely a succession of exhausting days and restless nights. And hardly a week passes without reports of heat prostrations.

Meeting the Challenge of Hot Weather

While abnormal heat or humidity may be a secondary cause, the real reason behind much warm-weather suffering is a failure to meet the challenge of summer with a judicious diet.

Automobile owners know that no car is better than its engine, and in warm weather, careful drivers watch the gauge on the dashboard to be sure the engine does not become overheated. But most people give little thought to that most remarkable of all engines—the human digestive machinery.

Compared to the engine in your body, the one in your car is a crude, rough affair that can stand no end of punishment. Moreover, the automobile is driven for a certain length of time and then permitted to rest. But the marvelous mechanism which transforms your food into blood, bone, muscle, and your capacity for thought and action is never wholly at rest.

Importance of the Right Food

If the automobile engine requires special attention, how much more important to stoke your body engine with food suited to the weather!

No one would think of going about in midsummer wearing the same garments that were worn all winter. Yet many women continue to serve the same type of meals which were required to keep the body warm in winter. Such a practice is sure to make you miserable. But more than that, it lowers resistance and may, therefore, lead to illness.

Beating the Heat

There are several factors to bear in mind when planning the hot-weather diet. The first secret of keeping cool is to supply the body machinery with food fuel that can be utilized with the least expenditure of energy.

Warm weather is responsible for muscular relaxation in the digestive tract, as well as other parts of the body. And you run the risk of digestive upsets, with their discomfort and health hazards, unless you make every effort to lessen the work of your digestive system.

Eat lightly of rich fatty meats, pastries, rich cakes, sauces and gravies. At all times, choose easily digestible foods.

Overeating Saps Vitality

Don't overeat. The task of handling excess food is a burden to the body at any season. In hot weather, it will cause the body temperature to mount along with the thermometer, and may result in a serious upset. It is also advisable to cut down somewhat on the quantity of heat and energy producing foods consumed—that is the carbohydrates and fats.

Need for Body-Building Foods

The protein requirement remains the same summer and winter. Some people think that meat should not be eaten in summer, or should be reduced to a minimum. But there is no closed season for growth in children, and moreover, they play so constantly and indulge in such strenuous exercise that they break down body tissue very rapidly. Adults also have a constant need for protein to rebuild the millions of cells that are worn out daily.

It is desirable, however, to avoid rich, fatty meats and to select protein foods that are more easily digestible, as chicken, lamb, lean beef and lean fish. Special emphasis should be placed on milk, cheese and eggs. These splendid foods not only supply Grade A protein, in an easily digested form, but also fortify the diet with minerals and vitamins.

Liquids Essential

To help you keep cool, the summer diet must include an abundance of liquids. These are necessary to make up for the large amounts of moisture lost from the body through increased perspiration.

Liquids may be taken in the form of milk, fruit juices and cooling drinks made from pure water and packaged beverage crystals containing dextrose, fruit acid, flavoring and coloring.

Hot Weather and Vitamin C

Two European investigators recently found that exposure to high temperatures causes a 50 per cent loss in vitamin C from the body tissues. And lowered vitamin C reserves are partially responsible for that tired feeling so often experienced in warm weather. Their research indicates that drinking orange or lemon juice, which are rich in vitamin C, actually helps to mitigate the effect of the heat.

Choose Cold Drinks Carefully

A cold drink is comforting on a hot day. And in addition, sweetened beverages help to relieve fatigue, for their carbohydrate content supplies available energy. Sugar is the least heating of the energy producing foods, for less than one-sixteenth of the energy it supplies to the body is converted into heat. The rest goes into brain and muscle power.

Therefore, one good way to prevent needless fatigue in summer is to take a cool, moderately sweetened drink whenever you feel tired during the day. This will satisfy thirst and ward off exhaustion like a rest by the road after a long hard tramp.

Too, highly sweetened beverages, however, may be heating to the body, though they are cooling to the palate. For this reason, it is advisable for homemakers to mix their own cool drinks so that they can control the amount of sweetening used. It is possible to buy inexpensive packaged beverage crystals in a variety of flavors, which make delicious, refreshing and cooling drinks for general family use. One of these contains added vitamin D, and as the sugar is added by the homemaker, you can be the judge of how much to use. This is an excellent idea, especially in households where there are children, for the home-made drink satisfies thirst, provides needed energy and discourages them from buying bottled beverages of doubtful purity.

Schneider home east of Klemme. Mrs. Dale Schreiner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Schneider, and her baby daughter, Marilyn, accompanied the Blumenstocks to her home in Hibbing, Minnesota, Friday. Mrs. Schreiner has spent a few weeks visiting with her parents.

Harlan Trees, accompanied by his brother, Lonnie Trees of Clear Lake, returned Sunday evening from Canastota, South Dakota where Harlan had been receiving treatment at the clinic the past week. Mr. Wes Adams of Belmont took charge of the Trees Barber Shop during Harlan's absence. Harlan reports that fine grain crops are in evidence in South Dakota and that wheat went from 40 to 50 bushels to the acre and oats as high as 70 bushels to the acre.

Several Klemme Homes Given Coats Of Paint

Several Klemme homes are presenting a much neater appearance since receiving a coat of paint. Homes the writer has noted which were recently repainted are the Art Wellemeyer home; the Chas. Fritz home; the Emil Patet home; the Peter Josten home; the Herman Schuldt home and the Wm. Meyer home. Perhaps there are others in Klemme which escaped our attention. Klemme is noted for its well-kept homes and neat yards and lawns.

Government Money Now Ready For New School

FOR NEW SCHOOL HERE GOVERNMENT APPROVAL

Department Recommends New School Should Be Constructed

Mr. P. W. A. help for the building of a new Klemme school was assured Saturday when Secretary of Education R. A. Radford, regional director at Omaha, stated that a grant of $32,715 had been approved for the local project. The grant, which is an outright gift, represents 45 per cent of the amount necessary to build a modern up-to-date plant.

Qualified voters of the Klemme Independent District will go to the polls Thursday, August 18, to vote whether or not bonds shall be issued to raise $30,000, the only amount necessary to be raised by taxation. This amount, authorized by the federal grant, is approximately $10,000 now in the school treasury, which would build a $72,700 building.

Again, perhaps, will such a plan present itself; and state officials as well as local officers are of the opinion that there is a vital need for such a plan. This is evidenced by a letter sent to the regional director in the interests of a building by Mr. A. J. Steffey, supervisor of schools. A copy of the letter follows:

A. Radford
Regional Director of P. W. A.
Nebraska

Mr. Radford:
In connection with my work as regional supervisor in northwest Iowa I have visited the Klemme school building twice within the past three weeks. Following is a quotation from my last visitation report:

The building situation at Klemme seems to me to be the worst of your school. This is not due to the fact that it is a building but also to the condition of the floors and general appearance. The feature of your building that is in need of the most immediate attention is the removal of some hazards which were apparent the day when I visited."

The building at Klemme is one of the few frame structures in my district in northwest Iowa. It is old and inconveniently arranged and it will be necessary to expend a considerable amount of money to put it in desirable condition. It appears to me that it would be more desirable and even more economical for the district to have a new building to invest a large sum of money in the repair and reconditioning of the old structure.

Very truly yours,
A. J. Steffey,
Regional Supervisor

QUESTIONS and ANSWERS On the Proposed New School Building

Q. Will federal aid be assured if the election carries?
A. Yes, a grant of $32,715 has been officially approved.

Q. Is this a loan or an outright gift?
A. It is an outright gift. The only thing necessary to put it into effect is for the voters to approve the bond issue August 18.

Q. Couldn't Klemme build a school at some future time even without P. W. A. aid?
A. Not without raising the taxable valuation of property in the district. The present bonding limit is $30,000, and that would not be at all adequate for the purpose, even though supplemented by a large surplus in the general fund.

Q. What are the outstanding weaknesses of the present school plant?
A. (1) Its structure is hazardous in case of fire. The only means of exit for the two lower rooms is past one of the two stairways leading into the furnace room. The furnace room itself is directly under the primary room, and the structure above it is not at all fireproof.

(2) The playground is inadequate and dangerously located. It is bordered on three sides by roads, and there is less than half a block for 160 children to play in. There is no chance for a baseball diamond close to the building.

(3) The gymnasium-auditorium is inadequate in size and accommodations for a crowd. Scarcely a hundred people can be seated for a basketball game although our feature game of the season with Goodell is capable of drawing between 400 and 500 as was proved by staging it at Garner during the past season. Four of the teams that we regularly schedule refuse to play on our floor (Britt, Belmont, Garner and Clear Lake). All of our plays must be given two nights to accommodate the crowd, and there was inadequate seating on at least two other school occasions during the past year.

(4) The plant is in such condition that constant expenditure is necessary for upkeep. This item would be negligible for several years in a new building.

Tells Of Importance Of Combine In Nebraska Grain Fields

FORMER KLEMMME WOMAN, NOW NEBRASKA RESIDENT, WRITES INTERESTING LETTER

Panama, Nebraska
July 24, 1938

Mr. R. A. Jorgenson,
Editor, The Klemme Times,
Klemme, Iowa,

Dear Mr. Jorgenson:

As I was reading this week's issue of the paper, a small item interested me very much. The item was about the only combine being in use in that vicinity and it being in the curiosity stage. I thought of the contrast between the two communities and thought it might be interesting to you and the readers of your paper. So if you find a place in your paper you may print this.

We are about fifty miles almost direct west of the Missouri River in the southeastern part of the state. This is about twenty-five miles southeast of Lincoln. You spoke of the combines being a curiosity; here a steam engine and threshing machine is a curiosity. Every other farmer owns a combine and still there are not enough to cut all the small grain. Nine out of ten combine wheat, oats and other grain. It is nothing here for a farmer to have a hundred acres of wheat besides all other grain. Twenty-five to forty acres is just a small field and about a day's work.

The wheat and oats this year are very poor. The wheat went twelve bushels to an acre. Some places less and some places just a little more. The corn looks promising if rain is received soon and grasshoppers don't take possession. During May and June more rain fell than has fallen in the last four years. This month it has turned dry and hot. Everything is burning, that is, what the grasshoppers haven't taken. They fly in droves in spite of the poison bait that is being put out. Hay is a good crop this year, but there is no garden at all.

Work is scarce for laboring men. There isn't much work on farms as the majority of the farmers have tractors and do their own work.

I hope the contrast is as interesting to you as the one of the many interesting items in your paper was to me.

A Constant Reader,
Josephine Ell,

Here's Two Views On Processing Tax Refund

REFUNDING OF PROCESSING TAX UNAUTHORIZED

By County Agent T. C. Petersen

Mr. Ben V. Greimann, chairman of the county agricultural conservation committee, states that he has been receiving numerous inquiries regarding the processing tax recovery. Mr. Greimann repeats the following statement regarding the processing tax recovery efforts as issued on February 8, 1938, by Mr. Mastin G. White, Solicitor, United States Department of Agriculture:

"It has been brought to my attention that certain organizations are soliciting money from farmers and are representing either that they can obtain refunds of processing taxes for farmers under existing legislation or that they can expedite the passage of legislation authorizing such tax refunds of processing taxes either under existing legislation or under laws which these persons hope will be passed, have been made from time to time since January 6, 1936, when the Supreme Court declared the processing taxes to be invalid.

In connection with this matter, it should be emphatically stated that there is no provision of existing law which authorizes or allows any refund of processing taxes to a farmer, regardless of whether he was a signer of an adjustment contract or a non-signer, unless such farmer was the actual processor and himself paid the processing taxes to the Collector of Internal Revenue and did not pass such taxes on to the consumer.

It should also be emphasized that if any legislation should be passed by the Congress authorizing or allowing any refund of processing taxes to a farmer, whether signer or non-signer, on any basis other than that contained in present legislation, it would be necessary for the farmer in securing his refund, to be represented by any intermediate agent.

Representations by any persons or organizations to the effect that they can, under existing law, obtain a refund of processing taxes for a farmer who was not a processor are false and misleading. Likewise, representations by any person or organization to the effect that they can, under any future law, obtain a refund of processing taxes for a farmer, whether signer or non-signer, which the farmer himself could not obtain, are also false and misleading. Farmers should be warned not to allow themselves to be mulcted of funds upon such false promises."

NEW PLANS FOR TAX REFUND TO FARMERS

Only Farmers Asking For Refund Will Be Included

By Ruby Wacker, Secretary of the Local Farmers Union

Thursday evening, July 21, Leon Garber said, "According to the plans now being developed, the National Farmers Processing Tax Association will ask Congress when it convenes in January, to refund Hog Processing Taxes to those farmers who ask for the refund."

"This is a new approach to the problem," said Mr. Garber, National manager of the association. "In the last session of the Congress, the Rail Roads secured the enactment of a similar Bill to refund to them a tax paid under the invalidated Railroad Retirement Act of 1934. The Bill named the 150 railroads and the amount that each railroad was to receive in the way of refund. The amounts ranged all the way from $2.49 to $14,000.00. The Bill covered the claims of the certain railroads and none other. The claims were presented by the American Association of Railroads.

Following the same procedure, the National Farmers Processing Tax Recovery Association will present the claims for payment of its members and those which it is authorized to represent and none other. In this way, Congress will know how much money is to be refunded and who is to get it. There will not be the stumbling block of an indefinite amount as has been the case in the Bill that has been before the Congress for the past two sessions.

All the claims that are in the possession of the Association will be blanketed into one Bill and presented to Congress for Passage. In accordance with this new plan all farmers who wish to secure the refund of the illegal processing tax which they in fact paid during the old AAA will be required to file their claims this summer and early this fall. The books will undoubtedly be closed early this fall and no more memberships are to be accepted after that time. The reason for this is the fact that it will take some considerable time to audit and properly prepare all the claims of the members, before the session of Congress convenes, for inclusion in the Bill.

At best, the time is short for the Hog producers to get their claims in so that they can be enclosed. Those that are not in at the deadline cannot be included. The officers of the National Association have believed for some time that the farmers who have made the fight and financed the fight should receive first consideration."

What's Your HOBBY?

body's Doing It: The Banker Has a Toy Road, the Butcher is a Camera Fan, and Baker Collects Stamps!

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

do you spend your spare time? Or do you waste it? There's a difference, you see. It's easy to stand on a street and watch the world go by, but you're apt to crawl into a night feeling like a fifth wheel on the buggy that makes the world go 'round.

To utilize spare time, is a problem that vexed mankind before bored monarchs snapped their pudgy fingers to the pipers play.

Today, in a world of shorter working hours and increased consciousness, intelligent use of our "loafing" hours is a matter. But don't take it too seriously; instead, why not use it for a hobby?

Every walk of life these days, you're apt to meet collectors, candid cameramen and miniature railroaders. The garage mechanic who tunes up your car probably tinkers with the radio between the meal and bedtime. A States Supreme court justice may surreptitiously collect rare old books.

am on Your Porridge."

Each day a stage where the thing to look for is not people have hobbies, but those who have called it a way to cream on your porridge," means that a not-too-serious will add zest to the most of life. Nor need your work be humdrum; Henry Ford, America's busiest industrialist, devotes his spare time to the famous Greenfield at Dearborn, Mich. Albert Einstein, the scientist, relaxes by away at his violin. Andre Petz, the orchestra leader, is a wood carver.

Up the paper almost any day you'll find an item about your neighbor's hobby. In Chicago, last year, M. J. returned gas company superintendent, was visiting a friend's. The friend remarked that he to build a model of the liner, Rex. That set Mr. Smit and a few days later he building his own steamship, a model of the gigantic Titanic.

One, who is sixty-eight years old, suddenly discovered a new life. "I found I'd been doing something," he says. "It's making model steamships going to keep doing it that my life."

Age in the Hole. Blocks away Arthur Laed, an electrical engineer, goes to his whitewashed basement and works at the hobby—standing—marquetry. The science of making land-still life pictures and abstractions with veneer woods, to give the proper appearance. It's a hobby that demands the jigsaw and a lot of patience. In the end he develops a skill that may serve him in the electrical profession fail him. Incidentally, is an important of hobbies. More than one tinkerer has turned his avocation into a money-making business. In Massachusetts a woman new up with a liking for tinkering old, broken-down bicycles now made that her business and a good many years ago right brothers spent their spare time playing with gliders in a deserted spot called Kitty Hawk, N. C. Look what happened to them!

More than one stamp collector has had similar good fortune, turning his hobby into a professional stamp business that netted a living income. And in California the newest avocation

A Chicago woman attorney spent 50 years of her spare time collecting figurines like those shown above. Each figurine represents some outstanding figure in history. Costumes, hair dress, jewelry and other accessories are absolutely authentic. Outstanding in the above group is Joan d'Arc.

Old Bill Morris of the Blue Ridge mountain district in North Carolina tends this ancient frontier fire as his hobby. The flame was started by his ancestors 148 years ago and has been kept alive ever since.

cation is "hobby mining," in which amateur prospectors take to the hills each week-end in search of gold. This has resulted in a rush for claims, reminiscent of last century's gold stampede. These modern prospectors aren't finding much gold, but they have hopes and meanwhile it's a lot of fun. Some of them will probably strike it rich.

Career Hobbies.

Then there's also the hobby which can be joined with your professional career. An example is Mildred Dilling, internationally known harpist who began her rise to fame with a second-hand harp. When she retires from the concert stage, many years hence, she'll have something more tangible than memories, because she spends her spare time collecting old, rare, curious and historic harps.

Some hobbies can make you feel like a kid again, which isn't a bad idea. Several years ago some youthful minded father bought his youngster an electric toy train for Christmas and had so much fun with it himself that he bought another. That hobby, model railroading, has grown overnight until now many a hard-headed business man spends his evenings playing with a miniature train.

It isn't child's play, however. The serious model railroader builds his own "rolling stock" to exact scale size and has from 200 to 1,000 feet of track on which to run it. Today you can buy disassembled miniature railroad parts and build your own system, consisting of engines, Pullmans, coaches and innumerable types of freight cars. Train hobbyists prefer freights because of the variety they offer.

Or, You Might Try—

There's a humorous side to hobbying, too. Out in Halfway, Ore., Walter W. Evans collects—of all things—official positions! Evans is vice president and cashier of the First National bank, city treasurer, high school clerk, secretary-treasurer of the telephone company, key banker for his county banking association, public education committee-man for the same organization, and president of the Northwest Oregon Bankers association. Recently he decided to run for justice of the Peace.

Then, in Akron, Ohio, we find Walter Thompson, a gasoline station attendant who in the past two years has dissuaded 10 persons from suicide. That, says Thompson, is his hobby. His station is located at the end of a bridge. At nearby Cleveland a strange fellow who jumped through the trees at Brookside park, clad in a tiger skin breech clout, turned out to be nothing more than a Tarzan hobbyist. But police warned him to practice elsewhere.

Maybe the suicide stopper and the amateur Tarzan aren't true hobbyists, but to discover how important this business has become, you need only look at one of the exhibitions staged by people who have found a happy pastime and are willing to tell the world about it.

Famous People, Quaint Hobbies.

Famous people sometimes have unique hobbies. Jane Pickens, the songstress, weaves rugs and makes bobbin lace because it gives her time to think. Chester Morris, the movie star, is an amateur magician and Dr. Frank Black, musical director for a broadcasting network, plays with chemistry during his spare time. Right now he is experimenting with liquid rubber to use in making sculpture molds.

Perhaps you already have a hobby. If not, take a little sage advice from the experts before developing one.

The best way, they say, is to fall into something you really enjoy. Don't deliberately look for a hobby; simply drift into a stimulating avocation that brings you real enjoyment.

Another thing, don't be too strict about your hobby, because if you tie yourself up with a lot of restrictions the whole thing will suddenly become very irksome.

If you're not careful, your hobby is apt to take too much time at first. You may get so enthusiastic that life becomes one continual mental tussle between your hobby and your better self. But eventually you'll emerge from this stage with a balanced viewpoint, having learned to live with this new companion.

You'll discover that moderation in all things is an excellent idea, but what's more important, you'll not be alone with a pair of twiddling thumbs the next rainy afternoon!

Star Dust

★ Children of Stars
★ A Break for Nancy ★ Goodman's Cornetist
— By Virginia Vale —

SOME day when you youngsters are grown up, and see by the papers that Ellen Powell is going places with this or that young man, you'll know how the old-timers feel when they read that Sue Vidor has been going about with Buddy Armstrong.

You'll probably say, "Why I remember when that girl was born—way back in 1938! Her mother was a well-known movie star, Joan Blondell, and her father was a movie star, too—Dick Powell, and a master of ceremonies on the radio, too. But, of course, you don't see them in pictures now."

And it seems like yesterday that Sue Vidor was playing that tiny little piano, and her handsome young parents were standing there, smiling at her. Her mother was a famed movie actress—Florence Vidor, who retired to marry Jascha Heifetz, the violinist. Sue's father is King Vidor, the director.

And, speaking of the passing of time, when she started work recently on "Three Loves Has Nancy," Janet Gaynor also started out on her twelfth year of making movies. Few others have stayed at the top for so long. Which reminds me that in "Tropic Holiday," the new Martha Raye-Bob Burns comedy, one of Bob's scenes is a burlesque of the one in "A Star Is Born" in which Fredric March swam out to sea to his death. People who liked the Gaynor-March hit picture won't care for that.

Janet Gaynor

Having fought with Columbia and had her contract bought off, Grace Moore departed for Paris, where she will start right in making pictures again. She'll do both a French and an English version of "Louise." And, as French pictures are rarely up to the United States standard, she probably won't like the result.

Nancy Kelly, aged seventeen, has been booked to play the heroine in "Splinter Fleet," and a lot of people in Hollywood are asking who she is and where she comes from and why she should be given so important a role in such an expensive picture. But at seventeen Nancy is a veteran who rates important assignments. She acted in the movies made in the East as a child, but gave it up 10 years ago because she had reached the awkward age, and devoted herself to radio. She was going strong a year ago when she got the role of Gertrude Lawrence's daughter in "Susan and God," a successful play that was one of the New York theaters' big hits this year. Nancy was a hit, too. Darryl Zanuck saw her performance and bought her run-of-the-play contract, so now she's back in the movies again, without making any effort to be. "Them 'as has, gits."

You can't tell, these days, where a swing musician will bob up. When Benny Goodman and his band were playing an engagement in Texas last year everybody for miles around who liked swing music came to dance. During the intermission a young man with a cornet in his hand came to Goodman and asked to play for him. Goodman took him into an adjoining room, Jess Stacey sat down at the piano, and the young man began to toot. "Buddy," said Goodman when he had finished. "Whatever your name is, you can join my band. By the way, where did you learn to put a horn through its paces?" "I'm a member of the Salvation Army band," replied Henry James, who's been a member of Goodman's gang ever since.

ODDS AND ENDS—Jack Oakie is taking bows on having lost a lot of weight, and George Raft is trying to reduce. . . . The Chinese government has offered Ann Sheridan's husband, Edward Norris, a lot of money to fly for them. . . . Fred Allen rushed off to Maine when his year's broadcasting was finished; he's eighteen miles from Portland (Maine, not Holfa), and swears that this year the radio fans won't find him. . . . They did, last summer, three weeks after his vacation started. . . . Remember "Three Smart Girls," the Deanna Durbin picture? There'll be a sequel, "Three Smart Girls Grow Up," with the same cast.

'Dosing' of Oil Wells Produces Salts That Ruin Refinery Units

NEW YORK. — Widespread use of acids to boost production from oil wells has brought in its wake a major trouble for the petroleum industry in the form of thousands of miles of ruined pipelines and hundreds of ruined refinery units, petroleum engineers report here.

Salts, 50,000,000 pounds of them, produced largely as by-products of the acid "dosing" of wells, are eating the walls of expensive pressure piping and plugging refinery tubes, exacting a stupendous economic toll, they reveal.

They are in addition lowering the value of residual oils and tars, eating up in waste a considerable portion of the increased income earned by the use of the acid process which increases the wells' yield.

Greater even than the cost of replacement parts and labor is the loss caused by equipment being out of service while repairs are made.

Petroleum engineers are turning increasing attention today, however, to this problem and report a number of desalting methods.

Methods of Removing Salts.

Heat, pressure and the addition of fresh water remove some of the salt from commercial crude oil, increasing the life of piping and refinery equipment greatly at a low cost. A Michigan installation, described in Petroleum Technology by Dr. Gustav Egloff and a group of petroleum engineers of the Universal Oil Products company, reduced the salts in the incoming crudes from 220 to 5 pounds per thousand barrels.

Incoming oil was mixed with about 10 per cent of water, then heated to 250 degrees under a pressure of 60 pounds. The salt removal, 212 pounds for each 1,000 barrels of oil handled, reduced corrosion from a continual cause of breakdowns to a very minor maintenance factor.

Chemicals to break up the shell of emulsion which protects brine globules from the surrounding oil have been used with some success. Once this protective coating is destroyed, water particles settle out of the mixture very rapidly, carrying the salt with them. Different chemicals are needed in each oil-producing area, and the search for a general desalting chemical agent, suited to all types and mixtures of oil coming to a refinery, is still going on.

Electrical desalting, in one plant, decreased the salt content of the crude oil from 200 to 8 pounds per 1,000 barrels. This particularly corrosive crude oil, from an Arkansas field, was mixed with water, then subjected to an alternating potential of 16,000 to 32,000 volts.

Supersonic Waves Break Solids by Vibrations

PORT HURON, MICH.—Supersonic waves—sounds too shrill in pitch to be heard by the human ear—will soon be used to break up solid particles into new degrees of fineness.

Sound's new use has been developed from research of Dr. Karl Soellner of the department of agronomy at Cornell university. He found that high-frequency sound waves not only make sediments, gels and precipitates disperse—as previously had been known—but also that certain solids having a laminated structure could be broken into fine bits by the intense vibrations created.

Materials on which the supersonic waves work well include graphite, mica and steatite. As soon as production changes are completed, colloidal graphite will be made of much finer particle size and longer suspension than has heretofore been available to industry.

Ears Reveal Paternity, Says a German Scientist

FRANKFURT-on-the-MAIN, GERMANY.—Possibility of determining a child's paternity from the shape of his ears appears in a report from Dr. Thordar Quelprud of University Institute for Heredity and Race Hygiene. The shape of the human ear, Dr. Quelprud says, has a number of personal peculiarities which appear well-developed in the infant. Left and right ears of the same person are often markedly different, so Dr. Quelprud examined both ears in his study of 5,000 persons. Twin and family studies, including studies of fraternal and identical twins, were made to determine hereditary characteristics. Shape, length and breadth of ear, height of concha, length and form of ear-lobe, helix and tragus, length-breadth-index of the ear, scapha and other characteristics were investigated.

Severe Tests Give Top Rating to New Type Of Concrete Block

CHICAGO.—A new type concrete masonry block has received a "top" rating after severe fire, water and pressure tests in the Underwriters' laboratories here. The eight-inch thick wall was given a 3½-hour fire classification—a rating of half an hour longer than any previous eight-inch wall of concrete masonry units has been able to secure.

A laboratory inferno was the testing ground for the new hollow building block. A specially designed furnace was built which burned 10,000 cubic feet of gas an hour—as much as a small city.

For four hours the 11 by 10 foot experimental wall of blocks was subjected to fire. In the first five minutes the wall reached a temperature of 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit. At the end of one hour the exposed face was up to 1,700 degrees; at two hours, 1,850 degrees; and at the completion of the test a temperature of 2,000 degrees Fahrenheit was recorded.

Wall Remained Intact.

All this while great hydraulic jacks were pushing down on the wall with a pressure averaging 175 pounds to the square inch.

At the end of the four-hour ordeal, the wall was removed from the fire blast and its incandescent face was washed with a stream of cold water, from a fire hose, under a water pressure of 45 pounds to the square inch.

Great clouds of steam obscured the wall. Snapping and crackling noises were heard as the wall underwent its rapid cooling and contraction.

The wall remained intact after this whole series of destructive actions. Architects and engineers examining it later expressed amazement at the slight effects of the severe treatment.

Temperatures recorded on the unexposed surface of the wall during the tests resulted in the prized 3½-hour classification. This rating can be increased to a four-hour classification when such walls are surfaced with three-quarters of an inch of gypsum plaster.

Greater fire protection at a lower cost is the objective of the research which developed the building blocks.

Head-Hunter Doctors Are Good Bone Setters

WASHINGTON.—Doctors of the Jivaro head-hunting tribe on the Amazon are good bone setters, and use casts of chicle—basis of chewing gum—to hold broken bones in place.

What a family doctor's life is like in this tribe, famed mainly for its head hunting, is reported by Matthew W. Stirling, chief of the bureau of American ethnology, who ventured successfully into their supposedly dangerous communities.

A Jivaro doctor, called a wishnu, has to study one month before he is considered ready to practice, but there are only six kinds of disease spirits supposed to cause most human troubles. He also has to learn to treat cold, fever and dysentery with specific herbs. His rigid code of medical ethics requires him to answer a sick call at any hour of day or night through trackless jungle. If he fails to cure he may be "sued" for malpractice, which in Jivaro legal machinery means he may lose his head or be required to pay the value of the lost patient's life.

Making Forests Too Tidy Is Bad for the Soil

GENEVA.—Don't tidy up forests too much, by removing fallen timber and otherwise clearing the ground, is the advice of a leading Swiss ecologist, Dr. Arnold Picot. If you clear away all such accumulations of "rubbish" you deprive the forest of much of its biological working capital.

Trees are a soil-exhausting crop, Dr. Picot points out. They withdraw a large proportion of the soil's original store of nutrient substances and lock it up in their stems. When they fall, the swarming destructive life of the forest floor—insects, worms, fungi, bacteria—unlock these hoards and return the accumulated capital to the soil as humus.

Lumbering operations inevitably carry off a good deal of this capital to market. Fire destroys it, not to be replaced for centuries. Fallen trunks, and forest litter generally, can re-invest a part of it in the soil, if only they are permitted to return, as dust to dust.

War on Caterpillars

SYRACUSE, N. Y. — Organisms that cause a deadly disease to tent caterpillars are being cultured at the New York State College of Forestry here, to be released in an effort to control the forest tent caterpillar, which has developed into a major pest. The disease has been known for a long time, but this is the first attempt that has been made to propagate it artificially and use it as a means of forest defense.

Ink Spots And Spatters

By Jergie

Regarding the grant for $32,715 which has been approved by the government for building a new school house in Klemme. I want to make it perfectly clear that the grant does NOT draw interest, that it does NOT have to be paid back AT ANY TIME. The grant is a GIFT from the government. A number of Klemme taxpayers have been of the opinion that it was a loan. . . the fact of the matter is that it is an outright gift, with no strings attached.

I-S-A-S

And while on the new school house idea I just want to remind you that sixteen years ago this school district remodeled the old schoolhouse and went in debt $22,000. That debt has all been paid up and a neat little surplus sum of $10,000 is in the treasury. In all, that means we have paid a debt, built up a surplus, a total of $32,000. It is reasonable to suppose that by voting for the $30,000 bond issue with which to build a new school house and using government aid, that the taxes should not be any higher than they have in the past sixteen years. Klemme paid up $32,000 in sixteen years without any hardship. . . it is reasonable to suppose that to pay a debt of $30,000 in the next fifteen or twenty years should be just as easy.

I-S-A-S

To break the seriousness of this column I submit the following: "I bought a wooden whistle, but it wooden whistle; so I bought a steel whistle, but steel it wooden whistle; so I bought a lead whistle, but steel they wooden lead me whistle. Then I bought a tin whistle, and now. . . I tin whistle!"

I-S-A-S

That static you heard on the radio last Wednesday afternoon was only the hot air flying out of the Democratic State Convention at Des Moines. Those extra loud crashes you heard was Herman Paul trying to convince the speaker there to lay it on hot to sizzle the ears of this column conductor.

THE PHASES OF ACCIDENT PREVENTION
The Fourth of July week end has again focused public attention on America's ghastly highway problem. Over the holiday, more than 500 people lost their lives—the majority from automobile accidents.

As highway experts point out, there are three definite primary phases that must be considered and covered in any accident campaign that is to produce results. These are: Standardization of traffic laws and devices in the various states; elimination of accident-prone roads and intersections; education of the individual driver.

At the present time, driving practices that are legal in one state are illegal across the border. Dozens of types of warning signals, lights and signs are in use, and constitute a constant bewilderment to the motorist who drives any distance away from his home town. The result is a legislative and administrative chaos, that breeds accidents.

Eliminating the accident-prone location is strictly an engineering problem. A wide, smooth-surfaced road is not necessarily a safe road. And a large collection of control signals and signs at a corner does not necessarily make for safety either. Safety engineers have designed highways and intersections which make it impossible for cars to cross each other's path, which obviate the chance of head-on collisions by the use of lane separators of one kind or another, and which eliminate other hazards. Practice has proven that this work will cut the accident rate astonishingly. Here is where government, federal, state and local can do an invaluable work which will benefit all the people.

As for education, the thing to be kept in mind is that sporadic campaigns are useless, and that continuity of effort is all-important. The great responsibility falls upon anyone when he takes the wheel of a car must be constantly drummed into the public. Engineers, law enforcement authorities, educators and the general public must work together. Only then will the growing toll of deaths and injuries be lessened.

PREVENT WINTER FIRES NOW
Now is the time to get ready for winter comfort, while the heating plant is out of service. Many a December fire has been prevented in August.

Your furnace should be thoroughly examined by an expert, cleaned, and necessary repairs made. Flues, chimneys and fireplaces should be given similar attention. All this work should be done in a first-class manner—short-cuts don't pay.

Another excellent plan is to go on a still hunt through the house for debris. Litter in the basement—rickety furniture you stored away in the attic and forgot—greasy rags and waste in the garage—accumulations of junk in drawers and cupboards—get rid of it now. Such accumulations are fire's favorite breeding places.

Next inspect lamps, electric cords and other equipment which is used little this time of year. They will have to carry their heaviest loads during the winter months—and any defect may result in a disastrous fire. And again, call in an expert—it's cheapest in the long run. Amateur electrical repairs are often worse than no repairs at all.

When this work is finished, you'll have a more comfortable home as well as a safer home. It's no sport to have your heating plant break down when you need it most—because of neglect and inattention. And no one enjoys awakening in the middle of the night to hear the crackle of unchecked fire.

In brief—do your winter fire preventing now!

PRIZE THOSE EYES

Psychologists tell us that our taste records one per cent of our impressions; our touch one and one-half per cent; our smell three and one-half per cent; our ears seven per cent; and our eyes 87 per cent!

The foregoing paragraph implies that the orbs are pretty valuable.

When a fellow loses his eyesight he's in a bad mess, from which there is no hope. His other senses have to take on extra duties, but even at best they can't begin to make up for the loss of eyesight.

Most of us realize that it is false economy to work without goggles where there is danger of an eye injury. Likewise, it is false economy to put off having the eyes tested and corrected at the first sign of trouble.

"Used" eyes—unlike used cars have no trade-in-value whatever.

When we've exhausted our quota, there just isn't any more to be had no matter how much money you have.

That Was True Last 2 Weeks Of July On Heavy Sows Economists Point Out

How a hog producer can increase his profits by watching the markets carefully has been illustrated in the last 2 weeks of July, Iowa State College economists point out.

During the last part of July, Chicago prices on heavy hogs, especially packing sows, have been much lower than usual in relation to the market in interior Iowa. Whereas Iowa prices on all classes of hogs generally run 50 to 65 cents lower than Chicago prices, because of the freight differential, during the latter part of July, heavy sows were selling 10 cents to 40 cents above the Chicago market at the interior Iowa points. The differential on lighter weight sows was not so great. Heavy butcher hogs, while still higher in Chicago than in Iowa, were bringing much less than the usual spread over the Iowa market.

A farmer who had been watching his p's and q's could have profited greatly by keeping tab on this situation, the economists said. During a few days in late July, it was actually possible to buy heavy sows at Chicago and ship them out to Iowa for slaughter. No hogs actually moved that way, but on the basis of the price spread, it was feasible to do so. This was one of the most unusual quirks in the hog market in recent years.

Near the end of July, the wide spread between interior Iowa and Chicago had narrowed some, but it was still much more profitable to sell sows at the interior markets than in Chicago.

The reason for the discrimination against heavy sows and to some extent heavy butcher hogs at Chicago, the economists said, was a strike in the plants of several so-called "city butchers" in Chicago. "City butchers" are packers who operate almost entirely on a city basis and deal almost entirely in fresh meat products. These packers are large buyers of heavy hogs, particularly of the rough, unfinished variety. Their being out of the market resulted in a weakened demand for such stock at Chicago. Another factor was the extreme scarcity of light-weight, good quality butcher hogs which resulted in consistently strong prices for such animals, widening the spread between the top of the market and packing sows. The spread between best-quality hogs and packing sows in the latter part of July was much wider than any spread in at least the last 6 years and probably one of the widest which has ever occurred.

HERE'S PLAN TO KILL LARGE WEED PATCHES

July and August are the months to start a long-time campaign to kill bad weeds especially where the weeds are in large patches, suggests E. P. Sylvester of the Extension Service, Iowa State College.

The plan which Mr. Sylvester recommends permits killing the weeds without sacrificing all crops on the land. The plan he recommends for large areas of such weeds as Canada thistles, horse nettle, European bindweed (creeping jenny), leafy spurge, perennial pepper grass and Russian knapweed, is to work the ground at least once a week from now until early September, then sow it down to winter wheat or rye.

In working the ground (fallowing), it is essential to work it each time before any of the leaves have had a chance to come through. For this purpose he suggests a cultivator with duckfoot shovels but a disc can be used.

The rye or winter wheat, especially rye, may be pastured some in the fall and pastured heavily next spring removing the crop entirely for pasture and then plowing it under or it may be pastured lightly in the spring and the grain removed as a cash crop.

Regardless of how the crop is used, the land should then be fallowed again the second summer and re-seeded again that fall with rye or wheat. The plan followed the first year is simply repeated the second year. The third year, if the land is suitable, it may be seeded in the fall to alfalfa after it has been fallowed all through the third summer.

Quack grass and devil's shoestring can be best killed in large areas by plowing and then repeated working with a spring tooth harrow in hot dry periods. As many roots as possible should be burned. The ground should be worked until frost and then seeded to a quick growing heavy cover crop such as sorghum, sudan grass, millet or soybeans the following spring.

The fallowing and smother crop must be used at least two years and it may be necessary longer. It has the advantage of dispensing with regular fallowing in busy seasons if crops like sudan, millet or sorghum are seeded. These crops if used should be put in rows and cultivated. As soon as they are harvested the land should be plowed. Remove the summer fallow crop in time to sow rye or some crop in the fall. These always should be seeded so as to get a thick stand.

HOW STORM LAKE GOT ITS NAME

In 1855 a party of United States surveyors was encamped on the shore of what is now called Storm Lake. An old trapper appeared and wanted to remain for the night. When the trapper asked the name of the lake the surveyors replied that it had no name and that the naming of it would be up to old settlers, hunters or trappers. During the night a furious storm blew down the tent in which the old trapper was sleeping. The next morning the old trapper suggested Storm Lake as an appropriate name and it was adopted by the surveying party.

"But now comes The Reader's Digest to keep me abreast of the times. The cutting and skipping has been done in advance by the editors. The pieces are of such compactness that even I can finish three or four on my way to a party and arrive sparkling with information."

THE CORN HAS LICE

There's a lot of "lousy" corn in Iowa this year!

From all parts of Iowa have come stalks of corn covered with tiny green plant lice to the entomologists at Iowa State College, asking what they are and what to do about them.

They are the corn leaf aphid or aphid. They are most often seen in the unfolding tassels and leaves about them, although some plants are practically covered.

There is no control for them, explains Dr. Carl J. Drake, state entomologist, but they are not going to do any commercial damage, he assures growers. They may damage occasional stalks, but there will be no wide-spread damage.

More of Lace This Summer Than Ever

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

AN UNPRECEDENTED vogue for lace is recorded this summer. No longer is lace considered from the luxury and esthetic viewpoint only. Lace has become a tremendously practical factor in the realm of apparel wearable for all occasions. Lace has come into its own in a big way, so much so that designers are thinking in terms of lace as they never thought before.

So lace-conscious have we become, women of keen judgment are acquiring entire wardrobes that are for the most part fashioned of lace. This is especially true with those who travel, for, put to the test, lace stands up under the stress and strain of packing and unpacking, in fact of serving for general wear as well as any other fabric. Of course, there are laces and laces and it behooves the woman who would be well-dressed to choose the right lace for the right occasion.

You can get laces that you can scarcely identify as lace, so fabric-like is their mesh. They tailor as perfectly as cloth and carry a sophisticated air about them. As for service, you'll be delighted with their practical wearableness. Then there are the handsome, washable cotton and linen laces that tailor so smartly in simple daytime dresses you will be wanting above all else at least one of these practical gowns. Perhaps we would be better expressing the idea to insist that you invest in several. They will carry you through most any social crisis.

So far we have been talking of lace from the practical standpoint. When it comes to reviewing the triumphs of lace from the esthetic side of the question we think the lovely evening ensemble to the right in the illustration tells the story more eloquently than any word-picture could do. This exquisite creation is of bottle green Chantilly lace, so delicately meshed it is like filmiest cobweb structure. A water green foundation with bands of crepe in rainbow colorings at the hem and bodice top of this slip reflect the spirit of joyous summer. The evening veil which has become a favorite headdress for formal occasion is of bottle green net with applied motifs of the lace.

A lace dinner and evening dress, such as is centered in the group, is almost indispensable in any woman's wardrobe. The short rounded bolero of matching lace, the full short sleeves as well as the easy fullness of the skirt are all features that make this dress distinctive and correct for both dinner and dancing. It comes in delectable colors in a new pattern of angel skin lace.

You will be wanting an afternoon dress of lace. A very apt model is shown to the left. Pale blue Chantilly lace fashions it. Its styling gives a particularly interesting interpretation of the draped bodice treatment that terminates in a wide molded corselet-girdle line. The hat is a Toya straw.

Lace costume suits, especially in jacket types, in navy, dusty pink, or various blues are outselling other sheer media this season. The jacket may go to extremes, varying from bolero to full length coat, but a jacket there must be with every dress for practical daytime wear. In many instances the lace jacket suit is enhanced with ribbon-bound edges. Frog fastenings made of tubular ribbon cording add a touch of distinction.

'ON THE SQUARE'

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Decidedly on the square is the formula that newer bags follow, and as to size many of them are enormous. Pictured is a bienen-davis bag on the tab of which are monogrammed miniature initials. Wide, flat handles and zipper top opening are added features to this bag which comes in tones of black, navy, rust, tan and black patent leather.

Suit of Hopsacking

A suit of yellow hopsacking is a flattering costume for a summer day. Its jacket may be fitted and belted or swing straight and free, but it must be short-sleeved. Add a blouse of white organdie or a vestee of printed lawn.

FASHION DECLARES FOR WHITE SUMMER

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

We grant that white is always a summer favorite, but this summer fashion is playing it up in a highly dramatic manner. Costumes are described in the fashion story as "white as snow" or of icy whiteness or white as fleecy summer clouds and so on. You appreciate the stupendous accent on white in fashionable gatherings where "white as a swan" capes and jackets; and boleros of marabou, fur or ostrich are the favored wraps, and where evening gowns float about in billowy masses of white net or chiffon or that which is late style—the pencil-slim draped dress of snow-white rayon jersey draped sculpture-like. Then there are the new white taffeta frocks, "beauties," that they are.

For day there are numberless man-tailored suits of sharkskin and other fascinating wash whites, while the afternoon dresses of white rayon jersey compete in endless parade.

White lingerie has come in and is the wanted kind at present. And as for accessory whites, footwear, gloves, bags and details too numerous to mention make their bow on the fashion stage in pure white.

Top a Print Frock With Silk Coat in Monotone

Well-dressed women find appeal in the new summer costumes that top the print frock with a silk coat in monotone that repeats the leading color of the print. For instance wear with a brown beige and rose print dress, either a jacket or full-length coat of brown silk crepe. Or a red-on-white silk print dress adds a bolero of red silk and there are red ribbon bow-trims on the frock.

TODAY'S BOOK

Maniac's Prey An Island in Caribbean Sea

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES
RICHARD CONNELL'S "The Most Dangerous Game" opened as a yacht sped through the warm waters of the Caribbean night. Two men sat talking about their hunting trip to South America.

Whitney commented that it is a good sport for the hunter, but not so good for the hunted, to which Rainsford scornfully asked, "Who cares how a jaguar feels?"

At a late hour when Rainsford sat on deck alone smoking his last pipe for the night, he heard shots in the distance. Yet they were miles at sea. He remembered that the sailors had been jittery all day and that this part of the Caribbean sea had a bad name among seamen. Curious, he stepped upon the rail to hear better; his pipe slipped, he reached for it, his foot slipped, and in a second's time, he found himself in the warm water.

Discovers Chateau.

In a state of exhaustion the swimmer finally reached an island, where he collapsed and slept for hours. Using his knowledge of the

RICHARD CONNELL

Richard Connell is among the Twentieth century American authors who have included a variety of types in their writing. Newspaper work, editing, and stories for the cinema are among his activities.

"Apes and Angels" and "Murder at Sea" are two of Mr. Connell's well-known stories. "The Most Dangerous Game" was presented on the screen several years ago.

Mr. Connell was born in 1893 and received his bachelor's degree from Harvard. During the World War he served in France with the A. E. F.

chase, he found signs of a recent fight and picked up a trail which led him to a chateau.

Rainsford knocked. The door was opened by a brutal looking Cossack who answered nothing but grimly brandished a gun. Presently down the wide stairs came an older man. "I am General Zaroff," he said.

The next few hours were so strange that Rainsford felt himself to be in a horrible dream from which he would awaken and find relief. After receiving the best of clothes, food, and all other comforts and luxuries he discovered his host was a maniac.

Dizzy and sick, Rainsford went to his room and began to think of escape. But his door was locked.

Rainsford's Three Days.

Next day the servant came to Rainsford's room, explaining that the general slept late on the day that he planned to hunt in the evening. Ivan gave the quarry a pair of moccasins, a knife, and food and water for three days. The bargain was that if any man escaped for three days, he would be set free.

At first Rainsford went in circles. But in the afternoon when he knew it to be only a matter of hours before he would be cornered, his instinct of self preservation began to function. Eventually he climbed a tree and stretched out along a limb, so that he could see.

That evening Rainsford saw the hunter cautiously examining every bent twig, every stirred leaf. Without faltering, he came toward Rainsford's hiding place. Until he stood beneath the tree. The general laughed and walked away.

The next day Rainsford tried an amateur trap, but it failed.

Dog Is Killed.

There was still another day to live through. With maddened fury the hunted man dug a Malay tiger pit, placing sharpened spikes in the bottom and concealing the pit with a covering woven of vines and leaves. Watching from a hiding place, he saw the hunter come swiftly as he followed the scent of a blood hound on leash. There came a crash and scream, and the general called out, "Rainsford, you have killed my best dog. I'll see what you can do against the pack."

There was no minute to waste. Fastening the knife to the top of a sapling, blade up trail, the man bent the sapling down to the ground and set his trigger. Hiding again, he watched the general coming with Ivan holding the pack. Seconds dragged until there came a yelp and shriek. Ivan fell to the ground.

Feeling that his game had cheated, General Zaroff returned to his chateau and dinner. That night as he prepared for sleep, he opened the windows to see the night sky. A sound behind him jerked him around to find Rainsford as a demon unleashed. "One of us will be food for the dogs tonight!" he cried, springing.

He had never slept in a better bed, thought Rainsford, the next morning.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses Cheese--Prince of Proteins

Noted Food Authority Tells Why You Should Eat More of the Food That Is So Rich in Protective Elements.

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th St. New York City.

FOR many years, men with an inventive turn of mind have dreamed of creating a product that would concentrate all the important food elements in a small tablet or capsule. They have been inspired by a desire to simplify meal preparation without sacrificing nutritive values.

No one has ever succeeded in making a synthetic food that would both satisfy hunger and properly nourish the body. But all the while, the researchers have overlooked the magnificent possibilities of cheese, one of the most concentrated, nourishing, satisfying and versatile of foods.

Cheese—The Body Builder

Cheese is the most concentrated source of protein known. Moreover, the protein is of such high type that if it were the only body-building food in the diet, given in sufficient quantities, it would be adequate not only to maintain life, but to support normal growth.

One-half pound of American Cheddar cheese will supply all the protein required by an adult for an entire day.

Cheese—The Energy Food

In addition to its rich store of protein, cheese is also a fine source of energy.

A cube of Cheddar cheese one-and-one-eighth inches square provides 100 calories or the equivalent in energy value of the lean meat of one lamb chop or one medium-sized potato. One-half pound of Cheddar cheese furnishes 1,000 calories, about half the daily requirement of an adult leading a sedentary life.

Cheese for Mineral Salts

Because milk is rich in minerals, it follows that cheese, which is made from milk, contains these precious substances in highly concentrated form. It is an excellent source of calcium, the mineral which is responsible for building strong bones and sound teeth, and for keeping the heart beating normally. A one-and-one-fourth inch cube of American Cheddar cheese contains as much calcium as an 8-ounce glass of milk.

The individual who does not care for milk as a beverage can easily obtain the necessary calcium from cheese. But it is practically impossible to get adequate amounts of this mineral without either milk or cheese.

In rennet cheese, phosphorus, as well as calcium, is present in the same proportions as in milk, but is much more highly concentrated. As in milk, these minerals are in a form that is most nearly perfect for easy assimilation. Rennet-curd cheese is always high in sulphur and fairly high in iron. Furthermore, the iron is in the most readily assimilated form.

Cheese and Vitamins

Cheese is a splendid source of vitamin A, which promotes growth and increases resistance to disease. It is especially important for eye health and is necessary to prevent the affliction known as night blindness. The amount of vitamin A varies with the type of cheese, but both American Cheddar and Parmesan cheese are extremely rich in this substance, and cream cheese is an outstanding source. Vitamins B and G are also found in whole milk cheese.

With this wealth of food values, one would expect to find cheese appearing on the menu in some form every day. But though the annual production of cheese in the United States exceeds 700,000,000 pounds, it should be much greater. The annual per capita consumption is only 5½ pounds—a woefully small figure when we consider the wide benefits that would result from its greater use.

The failure of American homemakers to use cheese in the amounts that they should is, I believe, due to three factors: first, a lack of knowledge concerning its splendid food values; second, a belief in the old superstition that cheese is not easy to digest; and third, failure to take advantage of the many ways in which it can be served.

Digestibility of Cheese

The foregoing outline of its many food values should give a new conception of its place in the diet. As to its digestibility, studies by the United States Department of Agriculture have entirely disproved the fallacy that it is not completely digestible.

It was found that on an average about 95 per cent of the protein and over 95 per cent of the fat of cheese were digested and absorbed. The various kinds of cheese tested were found to compare favorably in digestibility with the food of an average mixed diet. It was also demonstrated experimentally "that there was practically no difference between cheese and meat with respect to ease of digestion, at least in such quantities as are commonly eaten."

There was also a notion that because it is so high in food value, cheese should only be eaten in small quantities. But scientific tests have proven that cheese may be eaten by normal individuals in large quantities, as the principal source of protein, with entire beneficial effects upon health.

Place of Cheese in the Diet

There is a case on record of a young man who lived for ten years on a daily diet consisting of one-half pound of cheese, a one-pound loaf of whole wheat bread and two pounds of fruit. While this limited diet might prove notonous to some people, it is possible to utilize cheese as the easiest method of providing important food value, varying the diet, and simplifying meal preparation. There are more than 200 distinctive varieties of cheese listed by the department of agriculture, ranging from the smooth, delicately flavored cream cheese, which may be given to very young children, to the sharp tangy cheese, which is especially popular with men. Fortunately, almost every type can be purchased in packaged form, in sizes that are convenient for large and small families, making it possible to enjoy a wide variety.

Cheese can be used as a main dish; in salads or sandwiches; as a sauce for vegetables; as a dessert. It is desirable at the same time to serve bulky foods, such as fruits and vegetables. Cheese may also be combined advantageously with carbohydrate foods. This is because the balanced diet requires more carbohydrates than protein. And cheese is essentially a protein food, interchangeable with meats and fish.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—A national debt of $41,500,000,000! What does it mean?

I was staggered, as probably you were, the other morning when the newspapers came forth in black headlines—should have been printed in ink—that by next June 30 the American government will owe a total of $41,500,000,000. I knew from the spending that is going on that the national debt was going higher in the fiscal year started with the opening of the debt had to increase because of the lavish use of money by congress under the lash of President Roosevelt. But when I read the "revised estimates" official-ly by the bureau of the budget, somehow I was startled, amazed. The implications are so many that the magnitude of this debt simply overwhelmed me.

But there it is. Forty billions and half which Uncle Sam will owe the spenders get through wasteful chiseling, finding spots where loans or new projects or just in pork barrel distribution of money drain dollars from the federal treasury.

After the first impact of this news was off, I began to look around and see what it means. What does it mean to me, I wondered. And you? The first thought that I had was: how is this money going to be paid back to those from whom it was borrowed by Uncle Sam? Everyone knows, of course, that the federal government has two ways to get funds—by taxation or by borrowing. The fact that borrowed money must be repaid means, of course, that there is only one way by which we can expect government to obtain funds. There must be taxes—odds of taxes. Or, the government must do it which every person abhors, re-ly to pay its debts. That is re-ly, default, becoming a dead-

Therefore, this thing called the national debt has been more or less nothing "way off in the distance" to me. I could not be too much concerned, personally, how much the federal government owed, except that I realized some portion of it was going to come out of my own earnings while I am trying to pay education of my two boys, keep household running and buy those things which my wife enjoys. I figured, of course, that I would be making a part of each year to pay back the money that is being borrowed now. But somehow I did not get excited about the whole thing until this latest set of government statistics was released by Acting Director Daniel Bell, of the budget bureau.

I learned from the treasury that the per capita national debt amounts to $285.70. That is to say, without any more borrowing or spending, each man, woman and child in the United States, whether he knows it or not, has been obligated by his national government to that extent. Well, President Roosevelt says there will be an increase of $3,485,000,000 in the national debt between now and next June 30. That means an increase in the per capita debt, obviously. So when you do a little figuring you will find that by next June 30, the federal government will owe almost $320 for each man, woman and child in the United States of our country.

Having calculated what each person has been obligated by his government to pay, I pursued the figuring further to discover what each share of this huge national debt is. The tabulation that appears below is the result. It gives the share of each state and that state's proportionate share of the $41,500,000,000. Your state records do not show the amounts as a direct debt; but state legislature did not vote bonds which were sold in creating the debt, but the fact remains that if it became necessary for each person to pay his share, your state would pay the amount here set down.

If one desires to be technical and wishes to include in the national debt all of the obligations which the federal treasury may have to pay, the figures I have given will mount very much higher. There are numerous agencies of the government that are empowered to borrow money on their own bonds—institutions like the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Home Owners Loan Corporation and the Commodity Credit Corporation. It seems to me that when those agencies borrow money, the federal government becomes liable in event the federal agency is not able to pay, and the total of those loans appears to be in the neighborhood of $6,000,000,000. Since most people regard the federal government as having a contingent liability, there is some ground for including that total which would make the grand total of the national debt in excess of $47,000,000,000, and each state's share would be correspondingly higher.

What is the reason for this gigantic debt? Well, anyone ought to know that when an individual spends more than his income, he goes into debt. That is what this nation has been doing. I do not know how much longer it can continue to spend, to waste money in pump priming. It seems to me that the end will have to come very soon, or people will refuse to buy bonds issued by the treasury. The banks are loaded up with them now; loaded so much that Sen. Carter Glass, the veteran Virginia member of the senate, several times has said he feared what might happen if bond prices declined.

Fundamentally, there can be no doubt of the need to spend money to feed the destitute. On the other hand, can there be any justification at all for spending billion after billion in building post offices, national guard armories, etc., when there is none but borrowed money with which to do it? Every time an additional dollar is spent unnecessarily, the future taxes on you and me, our children and our children's children are pledged to the payment of the debt.

Pause to consider what it means. If we calculated the average interest on the debt at 3 per cent (which I believe to be fair), we find that if the nation pays off the current debt in 100 years, the taxes will have to be increased 33 per cent over 1938 in order to do it. If, as further example, the debt is to be paid off in 50 years, the current tax rates will have to be increased by 38 per cent over that entire period. Those statements assume that we will not increase the general cost of government over what it is now and that tax receipts will be as high or higher. It is apparent that spending must stop, or our nation is going to be as much of a bum, even in our estimation, as the most lowly hobo who eats from a tin can and steals a ride on the rods of a freight car.

Find Many Farmers Earn Income by Outside Labor

WASHINGTON.—About a third of the farmers of the United States have outside industrial and business income, it is indicated in a survey just released by the census bureau.

As a result of a study of 3,000 farms in selected counties in 40 states, according to William L. Austen, director of the census, many "new and surprising facts" along this line have been discovered. "Among those which have hitherto not been called to the attention of the public," he said, "are the high proportion of farmers who have outside income, the relatively high average return for such farm operators—equal to about three-fourths of the average income from the farms themselves, and the difference between the incomes of those making farming their principle occupation and those whose principal occupation is banking, keeping store, professional service and the like."

For the 975 farmers out of the 3,000 in the sample survey who reported non-farm income, Mr. Austen continued, a total of such income of $458,522 was reported, or an average of $573 per farm. About one-fourth of such farmers were found to receive less than $100 a year of such non-farm income.

Lesson for August 7

RUTH: ADVENTUROUS FAITH

LESSON TEXT—Ruth 1:6-18.
GOLDEN TEXT—Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God.—Ruth 1:16.
PRIMARY TOPIC—A Girl Named Ruth.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Story of Ruth.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Ruth's Wise Choice.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—An Adventurous Faith.

Out of the dark fastnesses of an underground dungeon into the brightness and warmth of God's sunshine—such is the transition we make when we turn from the moral and spiritual failures of Samson to consider the lovely story of Ruth. She lived in the midst of the travails and the sorrows of life, in fact we find her at the beginning of the book which bears her name, a widow who has lost all that the world would hold dear. Yet she, because of her purity of life and devotion to God rises higher and higher, while the one of whom we spoke last week, starting with every advantage, slipped lower and lower because of his sin.

Ruth was the great-grandmother of King David, and thus this Gentle woman became one of the ancestors of Jesus. (See Ruth 4:22 with Luke 3:22.) Many folk are greatly concerned about their ancestry—one could wish that more were concerned about living such lives and developing such characters as will make them good ancestors.

Teachers and classes will do well to read and study the entire book of Ruth—only about three pages long in most Bibles—and give attention to the full story of her life, especially the picture of the kinsman-redeemer, to be later fulfilled in the Lord Jesus Christ. We must confine our comments largely to the printed portion which reveals Ruth first as a loyal and thoughtful daughter-in-law, then as one whose love was not to be denied by sorrow or circumstance, and finally as one so bound to her mother-in-law in unity of spirit that she became one with her and her people.

I. Commendable Loyalty (vv. 6-10).

Tragic misfortune had visited Naomi, who with her husband and two sons had gone from Bethlehem to Moab in a time of famine. Not only had her husband died but also her two sons, who had married Gentile women, leaving three widows in one family to mourn together. Naomi craved the fellowship of her own people in her hour of trial and arose to return to her own land.

Her departure brought out in the two daughters-in-law the expression of kindness and loyalty which should exist in every family, but which is all too often lacking. Her own testimony concerning these girls of Moab is that they had dealt "kindly" with her and with the dead. That word speaks volumes. There is so little genuine kindness in the world. Both Orpah and Ruth went with her on the way—protesting their loyal purpose to go with her all the way. Thus far the two sisters were not differentiated—but the next incident reveals Ruth as the one who had an

II. Undeniable Love (vv. 11-14). No one could for a moment condemn Orpah for yielding to her mother-in-law's entreaty that she return to her own people. She affectionately kisses Naomi and in tears turns away. "But Ruth clave unto her."

Such love cannot be denied. It is the most precious possession that a man can have, apart from his fellowship with God. The love of a devoted father or mother, of a noble helpmate, or of a little laddie or lassie, these are the things that really make life worth while, that stand out as an oasis in the desert of life, as a light in the darkness.

But Ruth takes one more step. Her kindness and loyalty, her unswerving love lead on to a confession of her faith in the true God, and the declaration of an

III. Inseparable Unity (vv. 15-18).

Literature knows no more beautiful gem than verses 16 and 17. It was the Great Commoner, Bryan, who said, "We cannot hope to contribute to literature a sentence so exquisite and thrilling as that into which Ruth poured the full measure of a noble heart, but we can imitate her devotion."

The story is told of a fine young Englishman who left his betrothed sweetheart to go to California during the great gold rush. He was sent for her. He sent her his first gold nugget. But alas, there were none to follow and soon he became not only poverty stricken, but ill. In noble sacrifice he decided to release her from her promise, and wrote to tell her so. She (and one could almost believe her name was Ruth) took the treasured nugget, had it made into a ring engraved as a gift from her to him, with the additional words "Ruth 1:16, 17." In due time it reached the young man with its tender and inspiring message—"Treat me not to leave thee," and the assurance of her devotion until death.

May this dizzy and bemuddled world have many more characters like Ruth.

Order by number, enclosing 25 cents for each book desired. If you order both books, leaflet on making crazy quilts will be included free. IT WAS a great day on an upstate New York farm more than a half century ago. The biggest pumpkins, the finest apples and the sleekest live stock were being loaded to take to the Fair. Grandmother announced that she was taking her silk crazy patchwork quilt. The family disapproved. The quilt glowed with the richest taffetas and satins of "best" dresses of those they knew and loved. The whole neighborhood marveled over the variety of embroidery stitches and the artistry of the needlework. Yet, they all agreed it was not the sort of thing to take.

All that winter the red ribbons and blue ribbons, won by prize pumpkins and apples and farm animals adorned the mantel shelf. But Grandmother, placidly stitching away in her rocking chair, had tucked away in the pocket of her voluminous skirt, the only cash prize that anyone brought home from the Fair. Her crazy patch quilt is still a thing of beauty and a center of interest. It is perfectly at home in a modern living room today. Here is a corner of it and the leaflet offered herewith tells you how to make this kind of quilt and gives detailed instructions for dozens of stitches and combinations of stitches to be used for embroidering crazy patchwork.

"CAN'T BEAT IT FOR VALUE!"

Says O. H. Deans about the big, 2-ounce red tin of this popular "makin's" tobacco

THE Deans brothers (O. H., left, and Bruce, right) interrupt Bill Tew (center—selling a plow) long enough to get in some praise for their "makin's" tobacco. Says "O. H.": "You sure bet full value with Prince Albert! Suits me just fine," adds Bruce. Prince Albert twirls up in a jiffy into swell cigarettes. They burn slower, cooler—and you get around 70 of 'em from every 2-ounce tin. Just open a tin—smell Prince Albert's fragrant aroma—yon'll know why P. A. gives tastier, mellower, milder, "makin's" smokes.

Copyright, 1938, R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Winston-Salem, N. C.

O. H. DEANS (he's the one on the left) says: "There's a heap of smooth rich taste and good body to a P. A. 'makin's' smoke—and no harshness! For 'makin's' tobacco, that extra-mild Prince Albert just can't be beat." (Nothing like mild, mellow P. A. for pipes, either!)

Life Story Of Pioneer Is Interestingly Told Here

EXERPTS FROM HIS PERSONAL NOTE BOOK

Translated From Original Manuscript Written In German

Editor's Note: The following is a part of the interesting life of August Barz. The original manuscript was written when Mr. Barz was 73 years old and is taken from his personal note book written in a beautiful style of German. The story has been translated and is given here in part.

Life Of August Barz

I was born at Lenzen, December 30, 1864. My parents were members of the Evangelical Lutheran church of Belgard, Pommern, Germany. In this church I was baptized and I had completed the course of study in our school, I was confirmed at the age of fourteen.

My father was a day laborer and was a sheep herder and received very small wages. My mother died when I was only six years old, and my youngest brother just three. There were four children in our family and at the time my mother left us, the oldest was 14.

After some time, my father was married again to a widow who had four sons. Since my brother Fred and I were too young to go to school, we had to stay home with our stepmother who treated us cruelly. We received more beatings than bread. Whether it was for better or worse, I cannot say. Anyway, when we were old enough for school we were glad to go.

During the summer months when we were out of school we would herd the sheep and geese. This part of Germany the farmers raised large flocks of sheep and geese, and because there were no fences, the children had to herd the sheep. The sheep had stalls or sheds where they stayed at night. Every day the stalls would be changed to save the grass and at the same time to fertilize the land.

In Germany they raised the same things as they do in Iowa, except that the state had ten thousand acres of timber land. Every year one hundred acres would be cleared, and then replanted so the number was always kept at ten thousand.

Most of the children would herd sheep in the summer and go to school the rest of the year until they were fourteen years. Then if their parents were fairly wealthy they would be sent to some school for higher learning. Among the working people there were very few parents who could send their children on to school. This was the reason for our work to begin.

Most of us enjoyed this work. My first job was plowing. I really enjoyed it. This was done with three oxen hitched to a plow. It was customary there to use the oxen until they were too old to work then sell them and sell them. This was then used to buy horses. We boys worked under the supervision of a foreman, a man about fifty years old, who knew how to use all of the different kinds of plows. The man of whom I am speaking supervised the boys who had the plow horses.

One of them, I plowed for three years from spring until fall. At harvest time, and at the end of this time I was able to drive the horses at one time.

Let me tell you how we did our work. I was in the division to take care of the horses which meant I had to curry and harness them. During the summer months we had to get up at four o'clock in the morning. By six o'clock we had to have our breakfast and have the horses hitched. Then they would ring a large bell which meant that all workmen would have to start to work.

Each group of men had their foreman for each special kind of work. The foremen were responsible for having the work done well and right. In the evening when the large bell had tolled, and it was time to unhitch we had to be there to attend to our horses.

The single men and boys received their pay in money, but it was scarcely enough to pay for their clothing. The hired men who had families to support would have to work with two men for the whole year. Then they would receive a stall for one cow, a few sheep and a few pigs. These sheds or stalls were made of peat and straw. These men would also be given a house and an acre of land for potatoes, one for rye, one for oats, and a half acre near their house for a garden. Their landlord and employer would supply free pasture land for their one cow and their few sheep.

The people here used peat for fuel instead of coal. They would receive as much peat for one winter as it would take one man three days to dig. Beside the peat given him by his master, the laborer would be given a load of wood.

Whenever it was necessary for a man to have a team to bring home supplies, he was allowed to use one of his master's. In addition to all of these privileges and grants, the day laborer was given two groshen a day for his work. In our money this is about twenty-five cents. The only thing requested of this man by his employer was that he must be on the job in time, and that he must take the responsibility of the field work. All of the workers were treated alike. Each one would do his own threshing by laying the sheaves of grain upon the barn floor and pounding it until the grain was freed from husks and chaff. There everyone lived in the village with the farms surrounding the town.

Sometimes on very warm days the drinking water would not be brought to the men as soon as it should have been. Then to prevent sickness one man would be there to keep the men from drinking too much. Each one would be given just a small amount at first so it would not harm him.

Everyone looked forward with anticipation to the end of the harvest season, for it was then that our employer would give a banquet for all of his workers, and follow it with a dance. There young and old alike could entertain themselves as they wished.

In 1871 I changed places and went to work on a much larger farm. This farmer also had more horses. This matter of changing horses was not very easy for anyone in Germany. We had to notify our boss three months ahead of time. That also had its advantages, because the boss also had to notify his help three months ahead of time before he could discharge them. We could not just quit or start work anywhere we felt like doing so as folks time we felt like doing so as folks you would have to get someone to take your place who would please your employer in every respect. You could not leave until you had your papers, and no one could hire you unless you had papers from the man for whom you had worked.

After working at this second place for several years, I made up my mind to go to America. One of my half brothers had received a free pass from a friend in America, so I thought we might as well go together. Steamships were so quite new, and sailboats were so much cheaper, so we started for America in a sailboat. For six long weeks we were tossed back and forth by the winds. One day when we thought we were almost to shore, the wind changed, and tossed us back again for several days.

At New York I asked for a ticket to St. Paul, where my brother was going, but was informed that I had not sufficient money. I then asked for a ticket to a city on the route to St. Paul. The agent took all the money I had and gave me a ticket to Detroit, Michigan.

To satisfy my hunger I sold my good watch, pocket knife and pipe. Here in Detroit I could not get my trunk until I had enough money to pay for it. I was hungry. I hadn't worked for two months and not had much to eat which was really fit for eating on the boat. The bread on the sail boat had become stale, and it had been baked six or more times to keep it from spoiling. The only way one could eat this bread was to soak it in hot water.

Near Detroit the farmers paid their help fifteen dollars a month with board. In the brick yards they paid twenty-six dollars a month with board, so I took work in the brick yards. The hard work in the brick yards was almost more than I could stand but the large pay made me strong.

Does this sound like a fortune? Twenty-six dollars a month, the pay for twenty-six working days, amounted to as much as the wages for a whole year in Germany.

I worked in the brick yards until fall, and felt I had earned a large sum of money. I now wanted to go to St. Paul. During the summer I had often written to my brother and asked what they were paying there. I went to St. Paul, but when I got there I found it rather hard to get work during the winter months. There was a lot of timber in and around St. Paul. This had to be cut, the branches trimmed, and the brush burned before this land was ready for farming.

During the summer I worked in a wagon-making shop. Since I seemed to be getting along nicely, I decided to settle down and get married. I wanted to farm rather than do any other kind of work, because I liked to plow and work with horses, as I had done in my younger days. A good friend of mine in St. Paul told me of a piece of timber land which I could buy real cheap. This would have to be made into farm land by cutting down trees, grubbing out roots, and getting it ready for farm land.

But I was afraid to undertake this so I rented an old house and started to work for the farmers near there. During the haymaking time, I earned one dollar and a half, in harvesting three dollars, and in threshing a dollar and a half.

Since there was no machinery, the grain had to be cut by hand. Ropes of grain were tied around the bundles. During threshing time, I got into many different homes, and there would sometimes get to see a newspaper. Newspapers were very scarce in those days, and only a few homes could afford to get them. Whenever I found a little time, I would pick up the paper and see what I could find out about the different states.

One day when I picked up the "Apologete," I noticed that farms were being sold cheaply in Hancock county, Iowa. Hancock and Kossuth counties were almost entirely wild prairies at that time. There were few buildings, and little timber just plain meadow.

There was a minister in St. Paul who was acting as land agent. He had taken us to look at farms near St. Paul several times, but nothing suited us.

By this time the Northern Pacific Railroad was being built from the East to the West. In North Dakota and northern Minnesota you could get land for nothing just by taking a homestead, but I was not interested in that land.

In the fall of 1865 a friend of mine and I decided that we would rather try Iowa. This friend had a cousin who at that time was a minister at Concord in Hancock county, Iowa. We decided to go and see him and see what could be found. We finally reached Concord and found our man. This minister was also a land agent who tried to keep his people together.

MARIE STILLE A GRADUATE OF IOWA UNIVERSITY

IOWA CITY, AUG. 6 — At the largest summer convocation in the institution's history, the University of Iowa, Friday evening awarded 437 degrees and certificates.

The mark bettered by a wide margin, the former record number of 406 awarded in the August, 1937, ceremony.

Among the winners of the academic honors bestowed at the Friday evening ceremony was Miss Marie Stille, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Stille, who was awarded a B. A. degree.

Miss Stille will teach at Ridgeway in northeast Iowa the coming year.

The graduates were feted at a dinner Thursday where President Eugene A. Gilmore addressed them. The convocation speaker was Prof. Hudson Strode, visiting English professor from the University of Alabama.

The dinner and convocation marked the end of the eight-weeks' summer period of classes, although for three more weeks qualified graduate students will remain on the campus for independent study.

FARMERS UNION MEETING HELD TUESDAY NIGHT

The Liberty local of the Farmers' Union met Tuesday night, August 2 at Liberty No. 7 school house. The picnic celebrating the 36th anniversary of the founding of the Farmers' Union, to be held Sept. 4 was discussed. Mr. Chas. W. Phillips of Lincoln, Neb., gave a talk based on "Proofs of a Conspiracy," written by Prof. Robinson of Edinburg 160 years ago. It showed that present day political trends are not new but an age old scheme for the enslavement of mankind.

At the close of the meeting lunch was served by the committee.

EFFECT OF BOND ISSUE ON TAXES FULLY EXPLAINED

(By member of School Board)

A number of tax payers have asked the question: How much will my taxes be increased if bonds are issued for a new school building? First let us explain that the School Laws of Iowa limit the bond indebtedness and the bond levy for the purpose of paying interest and principal on such bonds in every school district. Therefore no school board has the power to place a district in debt so that it will burden the tax payers. The law says that the total indebtedness must not be in excess of five per cent of the taxable property of the district including moneys and credits. The total assessed valuation of the Klemme Independent School District for 1938 is $405,062.00 and moneys and credits $200,784.00 making a total of $605,846.00 five per cent of which is $30,292.30. The law again says that the amount to apply on the principal and interest of such bond issue for any one year shall not exceed seven mills on the dollar of the actual valuation of the taxable property of the school district. So in answer to the question stated at the beginning the board feels that under the present valuation that an increase of taxes of 5 mills which will bring in $2,029.31 a year is sufficient to retire the bond issue of $30,000.00 in 20 years. Now if you want to know how much your taxes will be increased in dollars and cents take your tax receipt and multiply the assessed valuation of your property by 5 mills and you have the answer. In other words if your property is assessed for $1,000.00 your taxes will be increased only $5.00. If you have only moneys and credits there is no increase in your taxes. There are about 210 property owners in the Klemme Independent School District and the property of about 150 of these owners is assessed for less than $1,000.00 so the increase of about 75 per cent of the tax payers will be less than $5.00 each. This small increase will not burden any tax payer now but it might if Klemme will have to build a new school in a few years because valuations will be doubled without federal aid. This school district can consider itself very fortunate if it is now able to correct its building situation with the aid of federal funds and present low interest rates.

HELLO, FOLKS!

TAGGED FISH REPORTED

At Clear Lake a total of 460 wall-eyed pike were tagged during the time when pike eggs were being obtained. Of this number 21 have been reported caught. At Spirit Lake 1,340 wall-eyed pike were tagged and 39 reported taken.

All Citizens Urged To Vote At Special Election Next Thurs'y

SPECIAL ELECTION WILL BE HELD THURSDAY, AUGUST 18

With election only a week away, interest is running high in Klemme's effort to get a new school building. A government grant of $32,715 has been assured, and voters will go to the polls next Thursday to decide whether or not the Klemme Independent School District shall use a surplus of $10,000 now available in the treasury and bond the district for $30,000, the only new amount to raise by taxation in order to secure a $72,000 building.

Friends of the project point out that the expenditure for a building has to come within a very short time anyway and that it's good business, if nothing else, to buy a NECESSITY at a 45 per cent discount. They point out that the present plant is inadequate in a number of ways, including safety, playground facilities, and seating capacity for basketball games, plays, and other public meetings.

Annual Summer Event.

That was the start of competitive birling, a sport that is at once toetripping and red-blooded. In a land where the heyday of lumbering has long since disappeared, a few enthusiasts have kept birling alive, gathering annually from the far-flung outposts of their primitive north woods to vie for the championship. There are veterans who remember the invincible Tom Fleming and Al Hubbard who reached their peak in 1898. They remember Big Joe Madwayosh, the husky Indian woodsman who won the title in 1924. They still watch Wilbur Marx, the child prodigy of yesteryears who tossed "Big Joe" into the pond when a boy of 14 summers.

But they cannot believe that birl-ing has become a college boys' sport. So they'll converge at Escanaba from every north woods settlement this year to watch some real lumberjack defeat Joe Connor, the twenty-six-year-old University of Minnesota student who won the crown last year.

Considering its barrel-chested heritage, birling should not be a college boys' sport. But the modern birling match finds veteran rivermen struggling to retain their laurels against lads who never worked on a log drive, who never pulled the key log from a jam. The practical side of birling is foreign to younger rollers but they know the rules of the game which is all that concerns the judges.

The Battle Begins.

And modern birling does have definite rules. A round, smooth and perfectly turned white pine log, 13½ feet long, and measuring all the way from 16 to 18 inches in diameter, is put in the water. Two men wearing light calked shoes mount the log, one at each end.

Then comes the battle, a tempestuous warfare of churning pine in which each man, by spinning and snubbing the tricky log, tries to throw the other into the water. With bewildering speed the timber whirls and stops, then starts the other way.
From the river bank spectators see an exhibition of perfect balance, timing and muscular co-ordination.
But eventually one man topples and splashes into the creek. As in wrestling, two falls out of three constitute a match.

Birling has flourished since the nineties without the aid of a promoter. But it was not until the lumbermen's exposition at Omaha in 1898 that it became organized as an annual national event. That was the year Tom Fleming defeated Al Hubbard in the final match. In 1900, 1901 and 1902 the tourney was held at Ashland, Wis., after which it was abandoned. In 1914 William P. Hart, Wisconsin sportsman, revived it at Eau Claire.

Birling's Child Prodigy.

Big Joe Madwayosh won his first crown in 1924 and on the sidelines that year was thirteen-year-old Wilbur Marx who decided birling looked easy. He came back the next year to provide the tournament sensation by almost defeating "Big Joe," racing him off the log after 21½ minutes of breathless birling in the second round.

When the next year's tournament opened Marx was again present, merely fifteen years old, but now a well-muscled, seasoned athlete instead of an awkward boy. Losing a third round elimination match in the northwest titular tourney steadied him and he won the Wisconsin state title without difficulty. Twenty-six of the most accomplished log cutters in the game were entered for the world's title and young Marx defeated four of them in swift succession, winning his way through the first, second and third rounds of elimination and the semi-finals.

Then he faced little Billy Girard of Gladstone, Mich., in the final match. Too eager, too confident, he made the mistake of thinking himself speedier than Girard and "Little Billy" raced him off the log for straight falls in the fastest match that has ever been rolled. Feet trod so fast they could hardly be seen; spiked shoes chewed the logs to silvers; "white water" splashed the contestants' legs and both birlers were almost continually on the verge of a wetting.

On to Victory.

But Marx was a steadier birler the next year and he could not be stopped. At sixteen he won the world's championship against a score of veteran log rollers. He held it 10 years.

But last year the college boy from Minnesota came along and Marx, whom the old time lumberjacks had at last taken to their hearts, lost his title. To what depths has this sport fallen!

This year Marx says he'll regain the championship and the bearded, birlers from the northwoods are wishing a real jam-breaking logger would appear to teach all these young upstarts a lesson. But Joe Connor, the college boy, has been spending the summer at a CCC camp making his legs tough and preparing to take on all comers.

Maybe Joe Connor will be defeated, but even then the plaid-shirted lumberjacks won't be completely happy. At last year's Escanaba tournament they rubbed their eyes with amazement and chagrin to see four girl birlers engage in a contest of their own. A few old timers admitted the women showed a speed and style that equalled or surpassed the skill shown by a lot of the semi-finalists in the men's tourney.

Their only consolation, it appeared, was in the memory of Paul

For Romantic Midsummer Nights

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

BEGUILING, yes, beguiling is the word that best describes the romantic formal designed for dancing these lovely midsummer nights.
Yards and yards around do these summer idylls of billowy tulle and nets, chiffons and laces measure and bodices are so quaintly picturesque it would seem as if it were ladies of the past come to life, for the styling is quite like we see in prints and portrait paintings of ladies in the days when "knighthood was in flower" and the very air breathed romance.

Perhaps the biggest news out of Paris at present is in regard to the high fashion of combining Chantilly lace with other fabrics. Typical of the best couture trends is the charming dress of sheerest marquise pictured in the foreground of the accompanying illustration. Its deep bands and bordering of matching Chantilly of most exquisite type are applied in latest approved manner. Most gowns have a complementary bolero this summer and this very beautiful model is no exception to the rule. The bolero is of lace with short puffed sleeves which are applied with lace as in the skirt.
Color of this adorable creation? It is carried out in a brilliant turquoise blue.

That pastel and bright-hued laces combined with sheers identical in color are a foremost mode there is no doubt, but there is also a tremendous vogue for the frock of diaphanous white that is lavished with black Chantilly appliques, insets and borderings. The white sheer frock worn with a black lace jacket or bolero is a leading fashion. Likewise the black chiffon or marquise frock or sheerest-of-sheer black net is frequently topped with a white lace jacket. Charming also is the combination of pink lace with black lace. A high built skirt with wide corselet effect of the black lace, that has a bodice top of delicately sheer pink lace cut with extremely low décolletage over which is worn a bolero of matching pink lace, makes a most gracious gown. It is practical to provide also a black lace bolero for less formal occasions.

In this season of flowing skirts and glamorous lines for evening dresses the gown shown to the left of lace and net combined fits right into the picture. It comes in delectable shades using cable net for the full skirt and an Alençon-type lace in matching color for the semi-long bodice. Below-the-hip jacket effects on this order of lace are the rage. If you have a sleeveless chif-fon dress or net and wish to give it a new look buy ready-made or have made a lace jacket to wear with it. These often button primly up the front with buttons covered with self-lace.

Maybe you are an enthusiast in regard to gay prints. If you should be possessed also with an awareness of the importance of simple wash fabrics for dancing and dining, you will be simply charmed with the quaint new flowered muslins brought out this summer. They are the sort that will stay crisp and fresh after every washing—never need a bit of starch no matter how often you whisk them through soap and water. We are picturing a dress made of just such flowered muslin as described. It is a type frock that will make you look just "too sweet for words" and you do not have to be endowed with a millionaire allowance to own it. A flowered muslin such as this that will not shrink, having been scientifically pre-shrunk and guaranteed to that effect, is new. Note its charming neck and puff-sleeve styling. Its fitted bodice is cut to give you that "long" look that will mark you as definitely in the mode this season.

SUSPENDER DRESS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

There's news for the sub-deb in that the suspender dress is regarded as smart fashion this season. It is proving a favorite at seashore and for town wear. The print silk suspender pleated skirt with monotone blouse is an especially outstanding type. The model pictured is of a neat print silk in gold and lighter yellowish tones. A peacock blue silk shirt is worn with the skirt shown.
Note that the skirt suspenders are slit at the shoulders and the pleated skirt has a wide band. Other models feature suspenders that are peasant embroidered.

Oddities for Summer

Pumpkin seeds and gilded snail shells are used for beach jewelry.

DRAPED TECHNIQUE USED IN NEW GOWNS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Most significant is the sentiment expressed in employing a draped technique in fashioning the latest gowns. The material that yields most admirably to this treatment is the very smart rayon jersey.
Wonderfully slenderizing are these draped effects and needless to say the fashion is making widespread appeal. Often the draping is aided and abetted with intricate shirring in clusters that tend to produce form-fitting lines.

The favorite for day wear is the black sleek jersey or satin that is draped to perfection. For evening wear no more beautiful gown can be conceived than a snow-white draped jersey classic.

Candle-Wicked Clothes for

Beach and Sports Doings

Quite new this season are the play clothes fashioned of candle-wicked unbleached muslin. The opportunity for designful decoration is vast. The grand part about the new candle-wicked muslin play outfits is that they wash out so easily, need no ironing and taking it from every viewpoint are about as practical a dress as can be suggested for beach and sports wear.

Mesh Oxford Shoes Offer

Maximum of Cool Comfort

A striking summer shoe which avoids the commonplace features of open toe and heel but offers a maximum of cool comfort is a mesh oxford. The mesh effect covers the entire shoe except for a strip at the instep and a wide binding. You can get this unusual model in white, beige, black or navy but its original design isn't to be picked up for a paltry sum.

Ink Spots And Spatters

By Jergie

I wonder if a certain Klemme miss has found the "green lamp black" she came to buy at Wilson's drug store the other day when the writer was quenching his thirst at Pete's fountain? Ruben, the curly haired sody jerk, politely informed her that she could probably obtain the mixture at Jacobs hardware... and the miss went smilingly on her way in quest of the elusive green lamp black. It recalled to my memory others who had been initiated into running useless errands looking for such things as a left-handed monkey wrench, a round square, pigeon milk, sky hooks, mosquito lard, striped paint, white shoe blacking and an endless variety of other queer items.

I-S-A-S

I just want to remind you that next Thursday, August 18th will be a big day in Klemme. On that date the voters of the independent school district will decide whether Klemme shall take a step forward in the matter of giving the best to the children in the way of education, or whether Klemme will struggle along with an old, unsafe school house for another indefinite period of time.

No matter what the outcome, it is YOUR duty to go to the poll's next Thursday and cast your vote, either in favor of the $30,000 bond issue, or against it.

I-S-A-S

And another way to look at the bond issue to be voted on next Thursday. Does Klemme want Uncle Sam to make us a gift of $32,000 with which to build a new school house, or shall we turn down such a generous offer now, and shoulder the entire burden alone in a few years later?

I-S-A-S

I again want to impress upon the people of this community that the grant has been approved by the government officials in Washington... that the grant is a GIFT and DOES NOT draw interest and DOES NOT have to be paid back. The whole thing in a nutshell is this. The Government is releasing

4 billion dollars to be spent on public works. Our share of that vast amount is there for us to use. If we do not use our share, some other community will be given what should have been used in Klemme. Think seriously before you vote against the bond issue next Thursday.

I-S-A-S

Some states require a compulsory inspection of automobiles, once or twice a year. I think such a law should be put into effect in Iowa which would help cut down on car accidents. Many cars involved in Iowa accidents have faulty or no brakes at all, defective and blinding lights, threadbare tires that cause blow-outs, etc. Many car owners, especially those who carry insurance, are particular about their cars and keep them in mechanically perfect condition. But the others... a compulsory inspection twice a year would require the owner to fix up his car or get it off the road.

MARIJUANA WEEDS ARE FLOURISHING IN COUNTY THIS YEAR

But Narcotics Are Lacking County Officials Say At Meeting Thursday

Marijuana weeds abound in Hancock county this summer, but the likelihood that they contain much of the vicious dope which has been attracting nation-wide attention is slight.

That was the consensus of opinion expressed at a meeting of the Hancock county board of supervisors held Thursday at the court house.

Emil Damm of Crystal Lake, weed commissioner of Hancock county, attended the morning session and had samples of the narcotic weed, which he said grew in abundance in all parts of the county.

A letter from the federal government directing attention to a tract of marijuana to be found on the A. E. Jensen farm near Crystal Lake was read, and the supervisors advised Mr. Damm to exterminate the weeds as much as possible, fulfilling suggestions from the government.

Co. Agent T. C. Petersen was also present at the session, and he said that he has identified many of the weeds to be found in the county as marijuana weeds, but he pointed out that it is seldom that the narcotic is potent in the weed in this section of the country.

Members of the board said there was absolutely no cause for alarm at the appearance of the weed, and that there could not be any drug traffic in the system of curing the weed was developed.

The weeds grow tall and are of such they are difficult to

National Topics Interpreted

NATIONAL PRESS BLOG WASHINGTON, D. C.

WASHINGTON. — There was a statement sent around to newspaper offices the other day that failed to attract any attention. It was to gain any publicity at all, it seems to me, it was one of the most significant announcements to come from any government department in months. The statement, issued by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, simply stated that a decision had been made "against making effective potato marketing agreement and program covering interstate movement of potatoes grown in 13 states and intermediate states."

The AAA announcement explained the "overall vote" was sufficiently large to make the marketing agreement operative under the law, but the conviction of officials was "not feasible" to place in effect in the light of the character of the vote taken. In areas of the 13 states and, in some of the states as a whole, there was actually a major opposition of the producers of potatoes who had rejected the agreement.

For the first time, a marketing agreement sponsored by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration was rejected. Perhaps, to be really correct, I ought to say for the first time, there was lack of public support that a marketing agreement has been made before it was started. If, if the folks charged with responsibility deem a plan to succeed, there must be an evident lack of enthusiasm. The tendency heretofore has been to cram rules and regulations on marketing agreements and condemn what have you right down farmers' throats as a means of "helping" them to the benefits of marketing. Recognition of lack of support, therefore, connotes something of a change in attitude of the AAA, but the significance as far as I am concerned continues to be the fact that farmers again are asserting independence. It amounts to a statement that agriculture has begun to shed of Washington meddling management of farms.

There are obviously two schools of thought about government's relationship to agriculture in this country. There is the philosophy represented by Secretary Wallace and his followers who favor crop control. They who argued for the production of supplies as a means to the more abundant life for the farmer, and it is the same Mr. Wallace who now is promoting what he calls the "ever-normal" idea. The other group of agriculturists take the position that the farmer should have some form of government assistance, but they object to any program that would take away from the farmer control over how the farmer runs his farm and what he produces.

It took place at my favorite table in the National Press club, a large table at which men gather for lunch. Usually, all 12 places are filled, and the types of work and means of livelihood represented are interesting of themselves—some lawyers, some government officials, some trade representatives, some writers.

On this particular day, Douglas Corrigan, flying "west" from New York to California, had landed in Ireland—without a permit from the department of commerce. The question: what could or should the department of commerce do about the violation of its sacred rules?

"Of course," said former Sen. C. C. Dill of Washington, "the department must take away his license. It has to do it. If it doesn't, there will be any number of foolhardy lads try the same thing."

"Well, now," observed H. O. Bishop, famed student of George Washington, "I just wonder whether that's right. Here we have a government department telling one and all of us that we must not fly across the ocean unless we get their permission. What are we coming to in this country? Presently, we will have to have a permit to walk across the Potomac river bridge. It may come to the end that we have to have a permit to buy food—as they do in Russia."

Senator Dill: "Oh, but that's not the point. There is a question of safety involved, human lives."

Mr. Bishop: "The railroad engineer isn't licensed. He is responsible for hundreds of human lives. This whole thing of the government getting tangled up in everything we do is silly. We don't have a democracy, any liberty, any more. It was the spirit of adventure that made this country great."

Senator Dill: "True. Take the Corrigan incident, however, and think what the government would spend looking for him if his $900 crate had fallen in the Atlantic. I've an idea that the cost of looking for Amelia Earhart mounted to several hundred thousand dollars. If the government hadn't made an effort to look for her, or for Corrigan if he had fallen, the newspapers of the country would have 'burned up' the officials responsible."

Mr. Bishop: "Where's it going to stop? Year after year, we see rattle brains get into congress and immediately promote some new regulation or create another political bureau or commission."

And so it went, on and on. Some finished their lunches and left; others came, and the argument was continued.

A few days later, the National Press club entertained Howard Hughes and his "round-the-world" flyers at a luncheon. Mr. Hughes was praised and his aides commended. They had made all preparations for their flight in accordance with department of commerce requirements. They were successful in their effort. And what do you think—the success of the Hughes trip subsequently was used by the same two men as a means of renewing their argument.

The moral? If any, it proves why a democracy is a good form of government. If you have an opinion, express it.

© Western Newspaper Union.

There might be some interest in an examination of the states concerned in this proposed, and now abandoned, marketing agreement. They are: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Texas and Virginia. The AAA announcement said there were 7,300 producers voting on the adoption of the agreement. My information is that this number is a pitifully small proportion of potato growers, even the growers of "early" and "intermediate" potatoes as distinguished from fall potatoes. Yet, there was not a sufficient number of these to warrant the AAA in making the program operative. What happened to the other growers? Well, I can make only one guess, namely, they just did not have any interest in it.

Of course, it may be different with growers of other crops. It must be recalled, however, that there has been a multiplicity of evidence that the corn farmers are dissatisfied, and there have been howls from the cotton growers and from the tobacco growers, and the wheat sections are the source of other complaints. I have no way of knowing what proportion of the growers of these crops are represented in the opposition already voiced. There can be no doubt on one point, however. The independence of the farmer is bound to be shown and if he is becoming disgusted with bureaucratic direction of his affairs, it is a condition that is more likely to spread than to decline in scope.

And speaking of regulation, I heard a conversation the other day that I am going to record here to faithfully as I can recall the words.

Case of Corrigan

It took place at my favorite table in the National Press club, a large table at which men gather for lunch. Usually, all 12 places are filled, and the types of work and means of livelihood represented are interesting of themselves—some lawyers, some government officials, some trade representatives, some writers.

Mr. Bishop: "Where's it going to stop? Year after year, we see rattle brains get into congress and immediately promote some new regulation or create another political bureau or commission."

And so it went, on and on. Some finished their lunches and left; others came, and the argument was continued.

A few days later, the National Press club entertained Howard Hughes and his "round-the-world" flyers at a luncheon. Mr. Hughes was praised and his aides commended. They had made all preparations for their flight in accordance with department of commerce requirements. They were successful in their effort. And what do you think—the success of the Hughes trip subsequently was used by the same two men as a means of renewing their argument.

The moral? If any, it proves why a democracy is a good form of government. If you have an opinion, express it.

There might be some interest in an examination of the states concerned in this proposed, and now abandoned, marketing agreement. They are: Alabama, Arkansas, California, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Texas and Virginia. The AAA announcement said there were 7,300 producers voting on the adoption of the agreement. My information is that this number is a pitifully small proportion of potato growers, even the growers of "early" and "intermediate" potatoes as distinguished from fall potatoes. Yet, there was not a sufficient number of these to warrant the AAA in making the program operative. What happened to the other growers? Well, I can make only one guess, namely, they just did not have any interest in it.

Of course, it may be different with growers of other crops. It must be recalled, however, that there has been a multiplicity of evidence that the corn farmers are dissatisfied, and there have been howls from the cotton growers and from the tobacco growers, and the wheat sections are the source of other complaints. I have no way of knowing what proportion of the growers of these crops are represented in the opposition already voiced. There can be no doubt on one point, however. The independence of the farmer is bound to be shown and if he is becoming disgusted with bureaucratic direction of his affairs, it is a condition that is more likely to spread than to decline in scope.

Lesson for August 14 THE RELATION OF TEMPERANCE TO CHARACTER

LESSON TEXT—Proverbs 4:10-23; 1 Thessalonians 5:6-8
GOLDEN TEXT—Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.—Proverbs 20:1
PRIMARY TOPIC—What a Wise Man Said
JUNIOR TOPIC—A Wise Man's Way
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How the Use of Liquor Affects Character
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How the Use of Liquor Affects Character

Childhood remembrances are commonly sweet and precious—but some of them are vivid on the pages of memory because they relate to dangerous and distressing things. Among the things decent people avoided like the pestilence when the writer was a boy was the saloon. To be seen entering such places was to mark one's character, and to be a frequenter of them was to be lost to all that was good and holy.

High sounding and very pious were the assurances that when prohibition was repealed we would never see the return of the saloon, but we have them in multiplied number, and with a shameless appeal to women as well as men, to our growing girls and boys as well as to adults. Clever advertising has sought to make it "smart" to drink, and "manly" to be able to "carry" liquor. It is for that reason that it is of the utmost importance that we develop strong and intelligent character in our boys and girls—so that they may not only appraise the vicious "booze business" for what it really is, but also have the strength of character to fight it, not only for themselves, but for their weaker brother. They should know and proclaim that the saloon, whether it be called an "inn" or a "tavern," is always a "bar"—"A bar to Heaven, a door to Hell; Whoever named it named it well!"

I. Developing Strength of Character (Prov. 4:10-23).

Solomon, the writer of many of the Proverbs, constantly stressed the importance of gaining wisdom. A man may be a perfect encyclopedia of information and yet may lack the wisdom to apply that knowledge to life. Dr. Hight C. Moore, in Points for Emphasis, provides a most helpful outline of this portion of Proverbs 4, which will assist the reader and teacher. He suggests that we must (1) "accept the challenge of a worthy goal, v. 10," by listening as a son to a father to the words which shall give us a long and happy life. Then we must (2) "follow the way of wisdom, vv. 11-13." It is a way that has been tested by those who have preceded us, and they have found it to be the right way. This will enable us to (3) "avoid the way of the wicked, vv. 14-17." Note the dreadful picture of those who not only do wickedness but delight in leading others into their evil paths, in fact they cannot sleep unless they have misled some poor soul. Shun that path, and (4) "irradiate the path to the larger life, vv. 18, 19." The way to life is a light path "that shineth more and more." The way of the wicked is stumbling and darkness. The devil and his followers are trying to make young people believe just the opposite. Let us teach them the truth that they may (5) "heed every syllable of all the words of God, vv. 20-23." Give attention to God's Word, listen to it, read it, keep it hidden in your heart. The heart in Scripture stands for the very center of man's spiritual being, out of which are all the issues of life. Evil thoughts, unholy desires and ambitions hidden there will ultimately be revealed in overt acts of ungodliness. Even so the Word of God hidden there will bring forth life in all its abundant beauty and strength.

The young man or woman who is thus taught God's Word in the home and the church will have an impregnable defense against the wiles and temptations of the world, the flesh, and the devil.

II. Exhibiting Strength of Character (1 Thess. 5:6-8).

The Lord is coming again! Paul was constantly looking forward to the day of His coming. It was not his lot to live until the Lord came, but he was not mistaken in looking for Him. The Lord has tarried, why only He knows, but it is the judgment of many excellent Bible expositors that the next great event to take place in divine history is His return. What a glorious hope!

But while we await His coming we are not to sleep as those round about us. Watchfulness, sobriety of life, these become the Christian. Certainly nothing of the drunkenness of our day is to enter into the life of the Christian. He who belongs to Christ does not drink of the devil's "fire-water." But far more than that is in mind here, for the Christian is to go on in faith, love, and hope until he becomes "on fire" for God, burning with the passion of the Holy Spirit, not only for his own life, but for the salvation of the lost and for the development of true Christian character in those who have taken upon themselves the beautiful name of "Christian."

'Fore long after the shootin', Sheriff Tom rides into town and hears bout the shootin'. It kinda hits him hard on account of Johnnie bein' a pal of his'n, and he don't wait for reason why there ain't been no posse after Butch. He lights out for the Diablo canyon country down close to the border where Butch and his gang has holed up for years.

Butch oughta gone right on to the border, but he don't. He stops by the shack, sends them riders of his'n on with them steers he stole from Johnnie and waits back to see if he can't do somethin' 'bout that foot of his'n.

He's a doin' a leetle doctorin' of his own when Tom rides up. Tom ain't never been a fool 'fore, but a-thinkin' 'bout Johnnie musta got him off, 'cause Butch gits the drop on him and takes Tom's gun but Tom does manage to kick a table over and put out a candle,

Life Story Of Mr. Barz, As Told In His Own Notes

EXCERPTS FROM HIS PERSONAL NOTE BOOK

Translated From Original Manuscript Written In German

Editor's Note: This is the second installment of the interesting story of the life of August Barz, a pioneer of Klemme. The original manuscript was written when Mr. Barz was 73 years old and is taken from his personal note book which was written in German and translated for publication here.

Last week the story ended with the search for farm land in Iowa. Mr. Barz had been working in St. Paul but wanted to come to Iowa to farm. Now go on with the story:

Life Of August Barz

We started to look over the prairies of Iowa. Every place looked the same as the next. There were no fences, no roads, nor trees; just the wild prairie grass. Finally I saw a piece of land which I thought I would like. It had a creek running through, and this suited me.

I bought this land piece, No. 32 Township, and also NW 1/4 32. My friend did not know what to do so he did not buy.

I rented a farm five miles north of the farm I bought, so I could have a chance to work up the soil. Then we both went back to St. Paul, satisfied that I had bought and rented some land.

The latter part of February, the winter wrote to us that, since we had no snow in Iowa, by all indications there would be a very early spring, and farm work could start in March. We finally moved out for our new homes. The two of us got one freight car and packed the few possessions we had. When we came to Garner, Iowa, we had quite a bit of difficulty getting our farm. The farm was several miles southeast of Garner. When we finally did get to the farm, the man who lived there had not moved. This man wanted me to help him move and wanted to sell me seed oats, hay straw, and all the things that I needed to start farming.

This man moved on a farm northwest of Amsterdam. While I was there I looked for some good land. Nowdays there wouldn't be any farmers hauling a load of grain twenty miles with a wagon and horse without roads as they did in those days.

Instead of an early spring as I had expected, it began to rain and get cold. We couldn't get out of the land until the twentieth of April. After a cold, wet spring we had a dry, hot summer.

Wheat was supposed to be the main crop, and with this we expected to pay for most of the things that had to be bought, but the wheat crop yielded only from ten to ten bushels per acre.

The grain all had to be cut by hand with the scythes, and put in bundles and tied by hand. Everything had to be done by hand. The corn had to be planted by hand. The land had to be marked in squares first before the planting was started. There were many gophers at that time that just followed the marks and dug up the corn as soon as it was planted. People didn't know what to do about this. Finally the county started to pay a bonus. The farmers were supposed to bring the tails of all gophers killed to the county seat. The people were according to the number and the gophers. Thousands of gophers were brought to the county that summer.

Later corn plowing started. Of course there wasn't as much plowing to be done as there is now, but it was much harder work. Every time we made a round we would have to look the plow over and sharpen the blades. There were so many roots of rose bushes in the ground that plowing was a very discouraging task. We would pull up all of the roots, allow them to dry, and then haul them home and use them to heat our meals.

After the first harvest was over the grasshoppers came in large swarms and laid their eggs in the ground. We farmers did not know what to do about this. If we would seed the wheat, the next spring the grasshoppers would take all of it. We were to plant corn, we would not get much of a crop. Of course the next spring when the grain came up, there were the grasshoppers. What were we poor farmers to do?

The county decided to get barrels of tar. Two farmers worked together. They made troughs or pans of tin which were six by twelve. Then they went over the land the same way one does when seeding. After the tar would get full of grasshoppers they were burned. Each farmer used about sixty gallons of tar. How many billions of grasshoppers were burned up and tar used, I do not know, but the ones that were destroyed could not ruin are crops. In time, the rest of the grasshoppers went away or died.

In 1877 we had good oats and wheat crops. Since the fields were small and most of it was in corn, the crops brought little profit.

About this time the Milwaukee company built its railroad west because so far it had extended only to Algona, Iowa. After the people had a chance to go west by train, many of those who had rented land, went. The land was free and they thought they could make a good living. During the year 1880, they had a severe drought, leaving nothing for the poor farmers to do but to return to Hancock county and start over again. All that they had, was lost.

From that date on, our county was being built up always more and more. When the snow was deep, the mail was brought from Mason City to Garner with teams.

At that time we could get no coal, so many had to burn corn to keep from freezing to death. We wanted to buy wood, but not even money could buy it. Wood was very scarce in our part of the county, because all the timberland was around Ellington and Amsterdam. Finally one day, one of my neighbors and I drove to Ellington. Here we found a man who said we could have wood, but we must take only those trees that were nearly dead, or were about ready to fall from wind or storm.

Although it was hard work and it would take all day to get the wood we were glad to get it. We would usually start about three o'clock in the morning with a piece of bread in our pocket for lunch. We would never drive faster than a walk, since each farmer had only one team in those days, and we couldn't afford the chance of letting our horses become overheated and die.

I remember one day in particular. As usual, we started at three o'clock in the morning. As we were picking up our wood, the weather gradually kept getting colder. When we had our loads ready, and were ready to go home, our lunch was frozen. We were so hungry, so we ate our frozen bread with out coffee, or tea, or anything to give us a little heat. Beyond the woods we could see the storm raging. The cold was so severe we felt as if we had no clothes on. We walked beside the wagon all of the way to keep out of the wind. When we reached home and had unhitched our horses we did not feel as though we had walked twenty miles beside the wagon on the rough ground and all during the night. In 1877 I wanted to build a house on the land I had bought.

There were two lumber yards in Garner; one run by an Englishman, and the other by a German. Since I could talk German best, I went to the German and showed him the bill. I told him I could pay only one-half of the bill that year. He answered me, "I sell only for cash, or not at all." I did not know what to do. Finally, I went to the Englishman and showed him the bill also, telling him, as I had the other man, that I could pay only one-half that year. He asked me, "Where is your land? How many acres are broken up? How much debt have you on your personal property?" I answered all the questions, and explained to him that I had no debts. His answer was, "You may have the lumber and you can pay me the other one-half whenever it suits you best."

I built a house as cheaply as possible as there were so many other things we needed. Machinery was very expensive at that time. A twine binder cost three hundred and twenty-five dollars. On the other hand, the things we had for sale had no price. Eggs were worth five cents a dozen, and butter five cents a pound until a creamery started in Garner. If we wanted to ship hay, we had to pay the freight first. For our few cattle, horses, pigs and chickens, we had built straw sheds. Everything was housed in the same shed. A corn crib was built out of braided willows. The willows were braided and then kneaded. The heavier branches were used for braces. We used this so that we would not have to buy nails.

First the gophers bothered us, then the grasshoppers and afterwards we were bothered by Indians and Gypsies. The Gypsies would steal more than the Indians.

By and by times got better. We built an addition to our house, and put up fences around a ten acre field for a hog pasture. We bought two more horses, and rented more land. By this time all of the farm was broken up and under cultivation, but we still used the straw sheds. We farmed this way for eight years.

Mr. Kimball took possession of the business Monday morning and is now on the job. Mr. Kimball is an experienced man in the shoe repair business as he formerly ran a repair shop at Corwith.

For the present Mr. Kimball will continue to run his farm until other arrangements have been made. He is married and has four children, two boys and two girls, all of school age. The children may enter the Klemme school this fall.

Mr. Kimball has an ad in this issue of the Times to which we refer the attention of our readers.

Special Election Will Be Held To Decide On Bond

ADDITIONAL SUM OF $215,000 ALLOTTED TO HANCOCK COUNTY REA

An additional $215,000 has been allotted by REA for the 349 miles of rural electrification sponsored by the Hancock county Rural Electric Co-operative of Garner in Hancock, Worth and Cerro Gordo counties.

It is expected that these funds will build about 232 miles of line to serve 590 customers.

Out of this allotment $6,000 will be used to defray expenses connected with the initial operations of the project which cannot be covered by the construction loan.

POLLS WILL BE OPEN FROM NOON UNTIL 7:00 O'CLOCK

All Voters Urged To Cast Vote On Bond Issue Thursday

Tomorrow, August 18th, a special election of the Independent School District of Klemme will be called to decide on a bond issue of $30,000 to be used, along with Federal aid, to construct a new school building in Klemme.

The polls will be open at 12 o'clock noon, and will close at 7:00 o'clock p. m. All voters in the Klemme school district are urged to go to the polls and vote. No matter how you stand on the proposition, it is your duty to vote.

A government grant for $32,715 has been assured. The school board has on hand $10,000 that can be used, and the entire sum would give Klemme a $72,000 building.

It should again be made clear that the government grant is an outright GIFT, with no strings attached.

It should also be made clear that the bond issue will NOT be a hardship on any taxpayer in the district.

It should be made clear that if the bond issue IS TURNED DOWN that taxpayers will have to shoulder the ENTIRE burden alone. . . perhaps within five years.

It should be made clear that Klemme's present school is a FIRE TRAP, that the playground is DANGEROUS and that the school is too small for the present needs.

It should be made clear that it is a GOOD BUSINESS DEAL for the taxpayers to vote favorable on the bond issue. It means a 45 per cent DISCOUNT on a $72,000 building, because the government grant is 45 per cent of the estimated cost.

Whether or not you are interested in education. . . the fact still remains that we MUST have schools. . . and if we delay building until sometime in the near future it will cost us twice as much.

The logical thing to do tomorrow at the polls is to vote YES.

MR. AND MRS. PAUL MUELLER ENTERTAINED BUTTERMAKERS HERE

Those present included Lloyd Kidd, Latimer; Clyde Jennings, Belmond; Mr. Smith, Alden; Ed. Clue, Goldfield; Mr. Petersen, Williams, and two men from the Des Moines Co-operative. The wives and families of the men were present.

After the picnic dinner the men held their meeting at the park, while the ladies were entertained by Mrs. Mueller at her home.

HYBRID SEED CORN IS DETASSELLED AT KANAWHA

Work At Experimental Farm Near Kanawha Is Completed

KANAWHA—The work of detasselling the Hybrid seed at the North Iowa Experimental Farm and the farms of Elmer Engstrom and F. N. Knudsen has been completed.

From 30 to 40 men have been employed on the farms. The corn was detasseled several times to prevent in-breeding.

The North Iowa Experimental Farm will install a larger furnace this fall for drying and will add two more drying bins. This will enable the farm to dry and handle a great deal more of the Hybrid seed.

W. L. Thada, local merchant, who manufactures and sells a self-setting, all metal mouse trap, has a booth at the North Iowa Fair this year where he has on display a number of his traps. The trap manufactured by Thada is called the "Runway Mouse Trap."

Mr. Thada's trap has a number of features found on no other mouse trap. One of the best features is a light trigger action that will trip with the weight of a dollar bill. The trap is self-setting and will catch large mice as well as baby mice.

The features found in Mr. Thada's booth are broadcast over KGLO each day during the fair at 11:30 o'clock a. m.

NEW LIGHTED HIGHWAY SIGNS IN OPERATION WEST OF KLEMMME

Two new electrically lighted signs just west of Klemme on Highway 69 now tell the world that Klemme is "Little But Lively."

The new signs show the motorist the location of Klemme with an arrow pointing to the east. The new signs also carry the information that the population of our little city is 500 and that we are served with electricity by the Central States Electric Company.

GOLDEN RULE

An elderly person said. "My children have all grown up, married and gone away. but I want to do something for other children. When my children were small, others were paying to help them. I will help now."

Another person said, "We have no children, but we believe in them, and we want to help all children."

A man said, "I have no children, but someone helped educate me, and I am going to do my share now."

A middle-aged son said, "My father gave me better opportunities and a better education than he had, I am going to give my children a better education than I had; and I will give them and all children all that is possible within my power and judgement."

THIS IS PROGRESS.

LONDON OVERNIGHT!

Doesn't Sound Strange After This Year's Ocean Flights?

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

In New York a hard-boiled fight announcer led his audience in prayer. Throughout America one hundred million minds were focused on some remote spot over the briny Atlantic where Charles A. Lindbergh was piloting his "Spirit of St. Louis" to Paris and fame. That was in 1927, only 11 years ago.

A few days ago another transatlantic flight ended and only a few hundred people bothered to read about it. Of more than 50 such trips being planned this summer, only two are attracting much attention, those of Howard Hughes and Douglas Corrigan, the "mistake" flier.

The ocean flight that made people hold their breath a decade ago has now become commonplace, and rightly so. This does not dim the accomplishment of Lindbergh; merely means that transoceanic aviation has grown up, that science has begun to capitalize on the carefully planned program of conquering the Atlantic.

The Hughes trip was but a forerunner of this summer's transatlantic travel, a back-and-forth series of journeys that will keep the waves humming for weeks to come. The ships of four nations are flying from Europe to New York over different routes in a series of "survey" flights. Great Britain started things a few weeks ago when the Mercury, unique pick-a-back plane, sailed away from the mother ship, Maiana, over Foyines, Ireland. The Mercury landed at Montreal 22½ hours later.

Takeoff Load Problem.

This "mother-and-papoose-on-her-back" composite ship has attracted more attention than any aviation development in recent years. British engineers worked on the well-founded theory that a ship can fly easily carrying excess weight but it can't take off with much extra load. Especially is this true of seaplanes, which are held down by suction of the water on their pontoons. So the Maiana and the Mercury, locked together, rise from the airport as a single unit and separate in mid-air. The Maiana is a land ship, the Mercury a seaplane.

Flying a different route—from the shores to New York—the Germans are working with three seaplanes, Nordwind, Nordmeer and Nordstern. The ships belong to Deutsche Luft Hansa and are making 14 round trips this year preparatory to starting regular transatlantic mail service.

France is experimenting this summer with the Lieut. de Vaisseau

London newspapers, one day old, were sold by this newsie in Times Square, New York City, a couple of weeks ago. The papers were carried across the Atlantic by England's pick-a-back plane, Mercury.

Paris, one of the largest flying boats in the world.

Stunt Flying Banned.

There is more to this story of aerial navigation than meets the eye. Transoceanic flying hasn't been merely a matter of building one ship larger than the last and seeing how far it would go without refueling. Since Charles Lindbergh first dreamed about it during his New York-Paris hop, the best minds of aviation have been working to develop fool-proof ships that will run mechanically.

Until such ships could be perfected, the United States was justified in frowning on stunt Atlantic ships. That's why Doug Corrigan's request for a permit last year was denied; it's why Corrigan had to depend on a wayward compass to fly his ship to Ireland a few weeks ago.

Outside of the weight problem mentioned above, engineers have found most of their difficulty in conquering the weather. Unlike the Pacific, which is usually calm, the Atlantic is beset with atmospheric disturbances. Especially is this true on the east-west hop, where until last year there were relatively few successful flights.

Until a few weeks ago the ceiling for commercial planes was 20,000 feet. Since engineers have long known that Atlantic weather disturbances could be overcome by high altitudes, they have been seeking some means of reaching these heights under practical conditions. Although oxygen equipment has been available to facilitate great elevations, it weighs so much that pay loads would be cut too low.

But from Sweden has come word of a new airplane motor capable of sustained performance at altitudes up to 59,000 feet. If it lives up to its claims, the motor will facilitate flights through the stratosphere where weather is always calm.

U. S. Service Ready.

Whatever may have happened to her supremacy on the high seas, America need take no back seat in transoceanic service. While France, England and Germany are busy with their "survey" flights, Pan-American is preparing to inaugurate regularly scheduled service from New York to London in her mammoth Boeing "clipper" ships. Just LEFT—Douglas Corrigan, whose "mistake" flight from New York to Dublin recently was frowned upon with good reason by U. S. department of commerce officials. BELOW—When Howard Hughes and his intrepid crew landed in New York after their record-breaking trip around the world, which augured well for the future of transatlantic aviation.

TODAY'S BOOK

Bought Island To Save Birds From Mankind

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

WHEN memory runs free to seek the treasures among books, it always comes to rest upon the tales by Dr. Axel Munthe. "The Story of San Michele" is the life story of a man you should know.

Nothing in the book is more appealing than the author's love of animals. His knowledge of the ways of birds, monkeys, dogs, and wild animals makes the book almost an animal story. Resentment against confining animals in cages led him to state that in a zoo, the monkeys are on the outside, looking in. Hunting as a sport was nauseous to Dr. Munthe and he wrote: "The time will come when the mere pleasure of killing will die out in man. As long as it is there, man has no claim to call himself civilized, he is a mere barbarian, a missing link between his wild ancestors who slew each other with stone axes for a piece of raw flesh and the man of the future."

This attitude was by no means an assumed front: Dr. Munthe bought the Isle of Capri in the Bay of Naples because it was the only way

Elizabeth James

"LISTENED" TO LIFE

In writing a preface to the American edition of "The Story of San Michele," Dr. Munthe interpreted his own book. He comments on the reviewers who had already published analyses of his book and presents reasons why he disagrees with some of their comments. His book had been called The Memoirs of a Doctor and The Autobiography of Dr. Munthe. Both of the comments appear inaccurate to him, for his purpose was to present life, omitting himself as much as possible. He hoped to listen to the voice of life and to record what he heard.

that he could stop the cruel and wholesale slaying of birds there. The Italian fishermen had a practice of catching a few of these birds and of blinding them, then fastening them to act as decoys for the other birds. Their plaintive cries caused the other birds to come to see what could be their plight and they in turn were caught in nets by the thousands. These multitudes of birds were sold to be worn alive on chains on gala days.

Book Is Vivid.

Dr. Munthe appealed to the government to stop this, but to no avail. So he bought the island. At the end of his book, the old doctor pictures his trial in Heaven and the birds plead for him before the sternness of Moses!

A critic has said that Dr. Munthe, like Petrarch and Chaucer, has filled his book so full of narrative and incident, that short story writers could use it for endless sources of ideas. This is true. There are narratives connected with medical study in France and later with his association with Pasteur and Charcot; there are stories of vacations to Norway and Lapland, and down to Italy; there are human interest stories dealing with the lives of his friends and patients.

Another of his medical stories is that of the mixed coffins. When Dr. Munthe was practicing medicine in Paris, he had as a patient a young man from Norway who had an incurable illness. At the death of the boy, the family asked Dr. Munthe to escort the body to Norway personally. In the freight car where he was required by law to travel with a coffin, he met another man who was escorting to the coast the body of a Russian general. Both men were to take boats at the coast, one for Norway, the other for Russia.

Mixed Funerals.

In Norway Dr. Munthe met the family and learned of their plan to open the coffin. Privately he opened it himself, to see about the embalming. What he saw caused him to reel backward and to turn white. The black bushy beard of the Russian general greeted him. Dr. Munthe persuaded the mother not to see her son. And to this day, the Russian general lies in Norway and the Norwegian boy lies in Russia.

His personal acquaintance with Death took a different turn after Dr. Munthe had practiced medicine for some years. At first Death was a personal enemy to be fought by the bed of one patient; later Death became a force controlling the destiny of mankind. For Dr. Munthe was a volunteer to the plague of Naples, when people died a thousand a day of cholera.

For readers who like to meet a man who takes life zestfully, Dr. Munthe is recommended. Evidently others have the same opinion, for the copy of "The Story of San Michele" belonging to this writer is from the sixty-third edition.

A Play Outfit; a Basic Dress

DO YOU need something new to dawdle in or to dress up in? Here are two new designs, one for play and one for afternoon, that are so smart you really should have both. It costs so little, in time and trouble, to make them for yourself, with these simple designs that even beginners can follow with no difficulty. And of course you can splurge on some really luxury fabrics, when you sew your own.

Play Suit and Sports Frock.

This new design gives you both! The play suit has beautifully cut shorts and a nice bodice top with the sunniest kind of sunback. The frock is created merely by fastening that straight skirt around you, and the bolero goes with both! Notice how cleverly the ricrac braid is used to simulate a square yoke in the front. The smartest thing for this design is linen in a dusty pastel shade; calico, percale and pique are good, too. Be sure to trim it with ricrac.

Dress With Bodice Detailing.

Here's a design that brings a breath of fall smartness in the bosom detailing that you'll see in expensive models this coming season. Also in the Victorian sleeves, high at the shoulders and fitted to the arm below. The straight panel in the back, the gathers at the waistline in front, give you a lovely figure-line. Although it's so distinguished looking and subtly detailed, this dress is easy to make. Just six steps in the detailed sew chart. Make it now of silk crepe, linen or georgette. Later in sheer wool, satin or velvet.

The Patterns.

1557 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 5½ yards of 35-inch material. 10 yards of ricrac braid to trim. 1482 is designed for sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 34 requires 4½ yards of 39-inch material with long sleeves; 4¼ yards of 39-inch material for short sleeves.

Success in Sewing.

Success in sewing, like in any other field, depends upon how you approach the task in hand. To help you turn out clothes professionally looking in every detail, we have a book which plainly sets forth the simple rules of home dressmaking. The beginner will find every step in making a dress clearly outlined and illustrated within its covers. He Left Everything

A merchant, being told he had only a few days to live, called his lawyer, and said: "Make my will so my overdraft at the bank goes to my wife—she can explain it. My equity in my car to my son—he will have to go to work to keep up the payments. Give my good will to the supply houses—they took some awful chances on me and are entitled to something. My equipment you can give to the junkman—he has had his eye on it for several years. I want six of my creditors for pallbearers—they carried me so long they might as well finish the job."—Hoard's Dairyman.

The largest known pearl today is in the Beresford Hope collection shown at the South Kensington museum, London. It is 2 inches long and its circumference is 4½ inches; it weighs 3 ounces or 1,818 grains.

I would like to have some of my readers, if any, inform me where I can locate "Wood Lake" in Hancock County. According to the map containing a list of lakes, state parks and other information put out by the Iowa State Highway Commission the following lakes are listed in Hancock County: Eagle Lake, 906 acres; Crystal Lake, 238 acres; East Twin, 193 acres; West Twin, 109 acres, and Wood Lake, 52 acres.

I thought I knew my Iowa Lakes in this part of the state, but this writer has never heard of Wood Lake. Will someone please come to my assistance and tell me where this so-called Wood Lake is found in Hancock County.

$43,000,000,000 IN THE RED

One year from now, the federal debt will be in excess of $43,000,000,000. If relief expenditures continue, which seems likely, it may go far beyond even that stratospheric figure.

In the light of that fact, is it any wonder that business is worried—that the investor is discouraged—and that unemployment is near the record level? Government, like an individual, can spend beyond its income just so long. Then comes bankruptcy.

If the next Congress wants to avert that end, it will give thorough and immediate attention to the tax and debt problem. Until an honest start is made toward a balanced budget and regular debt reduction, we can't have good times in this country.

I-S-A-S

"RELIEF BUMS"

A news item tells of a Negro taxi driver who was unable to work for a time because of illness. He obtained $50 from a government relief agency to tide him over. Now he is back at work, and is trying to return the money. When it was pointed out to him that he was not legally obligated to do this, he observed that "that was the way I was raised—and that's the way I'm raising my child."

A great many other Americans can learn a lesson from this Negro taxi driver. One of the most ominous portents on the horizon is the fact that thousands of people have apparently come to look on relief as a "profession." They plan to make it their "life work." Productive jobs in private industry hold no attraction for them, when they can take it easy at the taxpayers' expense. They figure someone owes them a living.

This isn't a criticism of those people who have turned to relief only as a last resort, and are eager to get off the rolls as soon as opportunity for a real job comes along. Nor is it a criticism of relief per se. The hungry must be fed, the homeless sheltered, the clothesless clothed. Honest beneficiaries of relief aggressively seek real employment. Professional "relief bums" are a new menace to democratic government.

The Negro's statement was new because his attitude was so unusual today. It should be printed or every relief check and public grant.

THE THREE "MUSTS" OF TRAFFIC SAFETY

Better law enforcement, plus better driver education, plus better highways, constitute the key to automobile accident prevention according to the experts. And none of the three ingredients can be left out of this "safety stew" if we are to get results.

Better law enforcement doesn't mean tough policemen, and traffic judges who decree the maximum punishment on every possible occasion. It does mean modernized traffic codes, "fixless" tickets, a higher calibre of motor patrolmen in many instances, and judges and prosecutors who do their duty without fear or favor. It means a type of law enforcement whose principle purpose is not punishment, but accident prevention. Often some sound advice will do more to curb a reckless or thoughtless driver, than a fine.

Better driver education requires the scientific approach. Drivers must be appealed to on every possible occasion, by the written and spoken word. Messages must be made simple, vivid and memorable. The great majority of drivers involved in accidents can be made into safe car operators. In the case of the small percentage which is congenitally reckless, revocation of licenses seems to be the only cure.

Better highway construction is where the engineer comes in. When you build a road on which it is impossible to have a major accident, you've solved the traffic problem so far as that road is concerned. And modern planning makes it possible to come remarkably close to that ideal, through the use of under and over passes, traffic lane separation, and approaches which do not permit cars traveling in opposite directions to meet. The highway of the future will not only be faster than that of today, but immeasurably safer.

Accident prevention involves the long pull. It can't be achieved overnight. But properly directed and continuous campaigns, over a period of time, will turn the trick.

EGG PRICES ARE GOING UP, FEED PRICES DOWN

Producing market eggs promises to be a more profitable business during the rest of the year than it was during the last half of 1937, chiefly because of lower feed prices and rising egg prices, says A. D. Oderkirk, Iowa State College extension poultry marketing specialist.

"Egg prices, which were low in early June, have advanced to the point where in mid-July they were higher than either the 1937 or 5-year July averages. And because storage stocks are at the lowest point in 20 years, egg prices will undoubtedly show more than a seasonal advance the rest of the year," Oderkirk says.

"In the other direction, feed costs have declined to the point where it only takes half as many eggs to buy 100 pounds of poultry ration as it did a year ago."

Smaller flocks are another important factor in the egg outlook. On July 1 the number of laying hens and pullets was 33 per cent under last year. Production per bird, however, was the highest on record for that date. A large number of pullets are now entering laying flocks.

Plain Facts
(By Member of the Board)

FIGURES SHOW REPAIR EXPENSES ON OLD BUILDING TO BE HIGH

New Building Would Need But Few Repairs For Several Years To Come

A few more facts to be considered regarding the upkeep and repairs on the old frame school building.

Following is the net cost for repairs alone as taken from the records for the past four years:

1935	$1,370.00
1936	370.00
1937	710.00
1938	775.00

This is an average of over $800 per year for repairs. This amount would pay the yearly interest on a $30,000 bond issue because we know that the repairs on a new brick building will be very small for many years.

Another item to consider is the cost of insurance. The present rate on the old building is 94 cents per $100 while the rate on the two new brick churches is 30 cents per $100 which is three times lower. Therefore a new brick building can be insured for three times more than the old one with no increase in the cost of insurance to the district.

With the fact in mind that Klemme would eventually have to replace the old frame building the board has increased the General Fund balance from $5,905.98 on June 30, 1933 to $13,994.13 on June 30, 1938 with an increase of the total levy of only 6.11 mills since 1933. This was done so that there would be some cash on hand which would lighten the tax levy when the time came to replace the old building. If it had not been for this foresight it would not have been possible to make an application and take advantage of the government grant at this time. Therefore a new brick building would eliminate the repair bill of over $800 per year and would also eliminate the necessity of increasing the balance in the general fund from $1,000 to $1,600 per year which all means that there is a possibility of reducing the levy for the general fund which would offset the levy for the school house fund making no increase in our taxes.

A new building with sufficient playground and gymnasium facilities would be an inducement for more tuition students who at the present time pay one-fourth of the school costs of operation. In the past years rural students who have been on the borderline or near borderlines between Klemme and other towns have chosen the other school because they were able to offer them better facilities. This does not mean that more teachers will be added as some are of that opinion. The same number of teachers will be used in the new building. Therefore if more rural students can be attracted to our school it means that the amount received from tuition will be increased $81.00 for each student which will again help to reduce our taxes.

Think these things over, investigate for yourself and then vote.

100 YEARS OF CONSERVATION

The Conservation Commission in its exhibit at the Iowa Centennial State Fair will feature birds and animals of 100 years ago when the first white settlers came to Iowa. Such native birds as the grouse and prairie chicken, which were abundant at that time, will be shown.

A moving picture story of Iowa's 100 years of conservation will be shown at regular periods. The picture will give the story of wildlife in Iowa as the white man found it and what changes have taken place since. It will show what has been done and is being done to keep the population of game up to a shootable surplus. In addition to some 300 birds and animals over 3,000 will be shown. Included in the will be "Oscar," a 65 pound sturgeon which will make his annual trip to the State Fair car" is reputed to be over 30 of age.

The most complete reptile exhibit ever shown will also be featured.

SELLING OLD HENS IS PRACTICAL WAY TO CONTROL TUBERCULOSIS

The custom of selling all old hens over 18 months of age where the flock is not used for breeding, is a practical means of preventing tuberculosis from becoming troublesome, says T. C. Petersen, county agricultural agent.

Avine tuberculosis generally develops slowly, say specialists of the Bureau of Animal Industry. An affected fowl seldom becomes a menace to others in the flock until after 1½ years old, if proper sanitation is practiced. At that age the hen has finished her first laying year and if properly fed is in good condition for slaughter.

So long as the flock is replaced with pullets raised on clean ground from clean stock, the premises are constantly re-stocked with healthy birds. The sale of hens will pay a considerable part of the cost of raising pullets and the owner avoids carrying a large flock through the summer when egg prices are usually lower.

The disease frequently occurs in Hancock county and is spread from flock to flock by the introduction of infected breeding stock that may appear in perfect health. Diseased birds have a ravenous appetite, but derive little benefit from the feed. They become emaciated, the comb and wattles are pale, and the joints swell. Slaughtered birds show white or yellow tumors on the internal organs, especially the liver and spleen.

There is no cure for the disease. Where the flock is generally affected it is best to dispose of the birds and clean and disinfect the premises thoroughly before restocking with young birds, which should have been raised under strictly sanitary conditions.

Where birds are used for breeding, and the older hens are valuable, sanitation and careful routine examinations for the disease keep it in check. If the presence of tuberculosis is suspected in a valuable breeding flock, a test may be given to the older birds. The tests are made by injecting a small quantity of tuberculin into the wattle of each bird. If the test is positive the wattle will show a characteristic swelling within 48 hours. A complete description of the symptoms of tuberculosis in poultry, and means of combating the disease, may be obtained in U S Dept of Agriculture Leaflet No. 102, "Eradicating Tuberculosis From Poultry and Swine."

LARGE CROWD AT SILVER WEDDING CELEBRATION SUNDAY AT CLEAR LAKE

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Meyer Feted On Reaching 25th Year Of Married Life

A large crowd of relatives and friends gathered at the Clear Lake State Park, Sunday noon for a picnic dinner in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Meyer who have been married just twenty-five years.

Before the dinner Mrs. David Bonar of Forest City, in a short talk, expressed eloquently such sentiments as are appropriate at a silver wedding celebration.

One of the high spots of the "pot luck" dinner was an enormous roaster filled with roast turkeys from the Vic Meyer Turkey Farm.

The large wedding cake was baked by Mrs. Henry Brede and was cut and passed to the guests by the bride.

The afternoon was spent in visiting and before leaving for their homes, the guests presented Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Meyer with a purse of silver as a silver wedding gift.

Mr. and Mrs. Meyer have had the usual ups and downs which come to every thrifty family, and in twenty-five years a family will experience nearly everything. They have a family of three daughters and two sons. One daughter is married and lives on a farm in Wisconsin. The other children are at home. Mr. and Mrs. Meyer can also boast of having two fine grand daughters.

A few years ago Mr. and Mrs. Meyer built a neat little six room home in east Klemme. Mr. Meyer being a handy man with carpenter tools, built the house himself, with such help as the family gave him. They can be proud of their home

Mr. Meyer is employed in the Wellemeyer Furniture Store. Those who were present included the following:

Mrs. Frederick Meyer, Sr., Mr. and Mrs. Vic Meyer and family, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Meyer and family, Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Meyer, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Meyer and family, Mr. and Mrs. Irvin Moll and family, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Radloff and family, Mr. and Mrs. A. Wellemeyer, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ingram, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Goll,

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Bredlow, Mr. and Mrs. Emil Patet, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Schlawin, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Schroer and family, Mi and Mrs. David Bonar, Miss Lila Meyer, Miss Ruth Wellemeyer, Miss Elsie Christians, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Brede and family.

Denim Stylish for Sportswear

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

with an outfit that is made of denim.

A two-piece dress (shirt and skirt) of denim, as illustrated to the left in the group, will not only give untold service but it stands for style personified in the sports clothes realm. Every line and detail of this outfit reflects exquisite standards of tailoring plus perfection of fit and finishing touches.

Ship ahoy! See the lovely recruit for the sailor's life centered in the picture. All toggled out is this mid-summer siren in sturdy denims that never lose an item of perfection no matter how many the big waves that wash over them—old demon shrinkage doesn't have a chance. And what a wealth of style these sturdy denim togs do pack.

Even if the girl pictured to the right took an unexpected dive into the sea she need not be concerned about her outfit, for neither salt spray nor suds will make the sturdy fabric shrink. Note the nautical symbols, the pipings, braidings, all smart details of this grand garment that promises to remain true "for better or worse" wear.

By way of offering a few extra suggestions for the styling of denim we don't mind telling you that a bolero dress of denim will prove a positive treasure in your outing or vacation wardrobe. You vary the blouse to suit the occasion and it's "on again, off again" to suit the changing temperature, so far as the cunning bolero is concerned.

The idea of denim for children's play suits, dresses and other apparel should prove most inspirational to mothers.

SUMMER FURS TAKE STYLE SPOTLIGHT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Fur in summertime is just one of the charming incongruities that makes fashion an ever-abiding source of interest and enthusiasm. If you would keep pace with the mode you must acquire a white ermine bolero or a cape of pointed fox for this summer. When fall comes you will be wanting one of the new hip-length jackets in brown fur, advance models of which have already arrived. White marabou or ostrich neckpieces, boleros and capes are also proving of immediate interest.

Bed Capes Used as Evening Wraps Over Summer Frocks

Recently some very cunning breakfast-in-bed capes have been brought out that are crocheted with tiers of little ruffles from neck to hemline. They are too lovely to be secluded in the boudoir, at least that is evidently the thought of young and daring daughters of the household who conceived the idea of appropriating these delectable capes for wear as evening wraps over their summer frocks, and from all reports the idea is working out to perfection.

'Forest Green' New Color For Girl Scout Uniforms

Forest green is the shade chosen for the new costume to be adopted by the 450,000 Girl Scouts throughout America. The dresses are in one piece, made on princess lines with a flared skirt, and short, slightly puffed sleeves. They are belted at the waist and zipped up the front to a close, rolled collar.

Boleros Popular

Boleros become increasingly important for summer fashions. They are worn equally often with evening clothes and informal daytime dresses, and they are made of everything from velvet to organdie.

Fall Tweeds Stress Color

High style tweeds which will appear soon for the fall market have wine-purple-green-pink blended together in stripe or in tile patterns. Bolder are especially stressed.

Lesson for August 21

HANNAH: GODLY MOTHERHOOD

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel 1 9-18, 2 1-5
GOLDEN TEXT—Her children arise up, and call her blessed. Proverbs 31 28.

"Godly Motherhood" — All the power and grace of the infinite God working in and through the most tender and at the same time most potent human relationship—motherhood! There indeed is the solution of many of our national and social problems. For we agree with the poet that man, who regards himself as being mighty, ruling over land and sea, must defer to a mightier power.

"For the hand that rocks the cradle is the hand that rules the world."

Hannah was the mother of Samuel, who became one of Israel's outstanding leaders—a priest, a prophet, and "the maker of kings." God needed a great man, so He chose for him a great mother.

Our study for today will be topical rather than textual and extended to related portions in chapters 1 and 2. We consider Hannah as a mother who was spiritual and sacrificial, but at the same time practical in her daily life and service.

I. Spiritual.

Many are the tributes offered to mothers, but none has deeper significance than the testimony of a boy or girl that their mother has led them both by precept and example to have faith in God. Though other advantages may be beyond the reach even of the most self-denying mother, this most important of all benefits she may bring her children, but only if she herself is an earnest and faithful follower of the Lord.

1. Hannah trusted God in her hour of trial and sorrow (1:10). Although her husband was a man of good qualities, he had followed the custom of his times and taken a second wife. Hannah, childless in the presence of Peninnah and her children, was in deep sorrow. But she knew where to take her burdens; she brought them to the Lord in prayer.

2. She prayed—fervently and effectively (1:17, 18, compare James 5:16b). Mother's prayers have followed many a wayward boy and girl and brought them back to God. When every other influence for good had been swept aside, they have been unable to forget mother's prayers. One wonders what will happen to boys and girls who go out to face a wicked and bewildering world, with the memory of a prayerless, worldly mother to blight rather than to bless them.

3. She recognized children as a gift of God (1:11). And surely they are. Christian men and women should protest by both word and deed against the vicious modern theory that children are a sort of biological accident to be avoided.

II. Sacrificial.

The most precious possession a woman can have is a child of her own. It was, then, the deepest and finest sacrifice of a noble mother-heart when she

1. Dedicated her boy to God, even before his birth (1:11). Yet this act so fine and commendable was in reality only an intelligent recognition of the fact that children are a gift of God. Your children and mine belong to God. Let us not stand in His way (or their way) as He graciously leads them out into service for Him.

2. She kept her promise (1:24-28). Many parents have solemnly dedicated their children to God before their birth, and then later the prospect of separation from them has been too much for the parents, and the promise to God has been thrust aside. The writer has on many occasions seen young men and women weep with broken-hearted dismay because a mother or father has forbidden them to go to China, Africa, or elsewhere at God's call. Mother, have you kept your promise to God regarding your boy, your girl?

III. Practical.

Hannah not only promised her boy to God; she made the completion of that promise certain.

1. By guiding her boy in the right way (1:24). As a matter of fact, she went with him to the temple. A mother who "sends" her boy to Sunday school or church will never help him like the mother of whom it may be said "she brought him unto the house of the Lord."

2. By providing for her boy (2:18, 19). There is no more tender and meaningful story in all literature than that of Hannah bringing her boy his "little coat." It is still true that the best "support" a missionary of the Cross can have is a home that "stands by."

The story is told of a missionary candidate who had no "board" back of her but the "washboard" of a godly mother, and who made a valiant and useful servant in the foreign field. Such an arrangement may not be the most desirable and it really should not be necessary if God's people would give, but it has its glorious advantages.

Such a mother as Hannah would have such a son as Samuel of whom it is said that he "was in favour both with the Lord, and also with men" (2:26).

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Analyzes

The Cereal Grains

Well Known Food Authority Describes Their Place in the Diet

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th Street, New York City.

TO ME, there is no more inspiring sight in the world than a field of nodding golden grain. It not only pleases the eye with its grace and profound beauty, but it attests to Nature's bounty. For down through the ages, grains have sustained and comforted man.

In every quarter of the globe, foods made from grain constitute the largest single item in the food supply. This is as it should be, for no other foodstuff affords such a rich store of fuel value at such little cost. It has been estimated that during one day's labor, an American farmer, growing wheat by up-to-date American methods, can produce enough protein and calories to sustain a man for a year.

A Source of Power and Pep

Every nation depends upon some form of cereal to furnish motive power for the body machinery—to provide necessary energy to keep body and brain functioning efficiently. In the Western world, wheat is supreme. But in Oriental countries, rice takes the lead and it is the chief article of food for half of the world's people. Rye, oats, barley, maize and buckwheat are likewise important crops.

Energy Values Compared

All uncooked cereal foods show great similarity in their chemical composition and therefore have very nearly the same energy value—that is about 1,650 calories per pound. The weight of a 100-calorie portion is about an ounce. But there is a wide variation in bulk, depending upon the degree to which the cereal has been refined. For example, three tablespoons of patent wheat flour weigh one ounce; one and one-fourth cups of a puffed wheat cereal likewise weigh one ounce. After cooking, there is a big variation in weight, as well as measure, owing to the varying amounts of water absorbed. Thus a cup of cooked oatmeal mush supplies the same number of calories as three tablespoons of a pebbly dry cereal with a nut-like taste.

The Cereal Proteins

From 8 to 12 per cent of the calories in cereal foods are obtained from protein and two noted investigators have estimated that grain products contribute 38 per cent of the total calories and 37 per cent of the protein in the typical American dietary.

Laboratory experiments indicate that the proteins of wheat, oats, maize, rye and barley are about equally efficient in promoting and supporting growth. None of them compares with an equivalent weight of the complete proteins of milk, eggs or meat, but when combined with small amounts of milk, the cereal proteins become highly efficient.

Iron and Copper

The mineral elements of grains are concentrated largely in the outer layers and in the germ. For this reason, there is considerable difference in the yield of minerals from whole grain and highly refined cereal foods.

The mineral content of bran is from 10 to 20 times greater than that of patent flour, and whole wheat contains from three to five times as much iron, calcium and phosphorus. Bran, oatmeal and whole grain cereals are a good source of copper as well as iron.

Rich in Vitamin B

The different cereal grains are quite similar in their vitamin values, but as the vitamins are very that the amount of protein digested and absorbed from an equal weight of entire wheat or patent flours is practically the same. Thus when the two types of flours are considered as sources of protein and energy alone, they are regarded by nutritionists as substantially equivalent and interchangeable.

Many Forms of Cereal Foods

From infancy to old age, the cereal foods should, and usually do constitute the mainstay of the diet. Fortunately, there is such a wide variety from which to choose that there is little likelihood of monotony. Furthermore, because of their bland flavor, one does not readily tire of cereal foods.

In addition to the wide variety of breads, rolls, muffins, biscuits and griddle cakes that can be made from refined and whole grain flours, there are an astonishing number of cooked and uncooked cereals from which to choose. When served with milk, bread or cereals make an ideal and economical food combination.

Macaroni for a Main Dish

Besides serving as the main feature at breakfast and for the child's supper, cereal foods are useful as the chief attraction at dinner or supper when served in the form of macaroni, spaghetti or egg noodles. They are a fine source of energy and also furnish about 12 per cent protein. When combined with cheese, which adds protein, minerals and vitamins, they constitute a balanced main dish.

Cereal products of all kinds deserve a ranking place among FOODS THAT KEEP US FIT.

HOW TO SEW

by Ruth Wyeth Spears

WE SAY luncheon mats yet, more and more, mats are being used three times a day. This change from the traditional table cloth saves time and laundry; the color and variety of mats add interest to table settings.

A set of sheerest organdie is used with dainty china. The mat shown here is the other extreme. It is made of soft blue denim and is embroidered in heavy white cotton. Napkins may be made to match, or plain white napkins may be used. Here are all the directions you will need for the embroidery.

Cut the mats the desired size, pulling a thread of the fabric to guide you in cutting the edge straight. Hem the edges by hand with 3/8-inch hems, using matching cotton sewing thread or raveled threads of the fabric if they are strong enough. Now, blanket stitch over the hems with the embroidery thread as shown here at A. Next, make tiny chain stitches between the blanket stitches as at B. This completes the embroidery for the long sides of the mats. The short ends are embroidered more elaborately. Make a V stitch at the top of every other blanket stitch as shown at C. Chain stitches are then made as at D.

NOTE: Mrs. Spears' latest book gives complete directions for many novelties, gifts and things for yourself and the children. It also fully illustrates 90 embroidery stitches with interesting variations. You will use these again and again for reference. Ask for Book 2, enclosing 25 cents. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. LIFE OF AUGUST BARZ

From a land agent in Garner we bought more land which was SE 1/4 section 34, for $625 per acre I had to borrow all the money to pay for one-fourth of this, and had to give all our cattle and hogs as security. Since the Burlington railroad tracks went through my land, I received $175 from them.

A few miles north on the Burlington track, they built a side track where the farmers had a chance to ship their own grain if they ordered a car in advance. Several farmers went together and ordered one car because it was cheaper. If anyone wanted a car, he would have to go to Garner and place an order for one. After the car was loaded he had to go back to Garner to have it pulled out.

In the year 1884 a side track was built on my neighbor's land. This man started to plot his land in blocks. (This was Herman Klemme and the town there was named after him.)

In 1889 we bought SW 1/4 section 29 for $15.00 an acre. One-half of this was broken up, and the other half was still prairie. We had to find some way of draining out the land, but where were we to get the tile?

There were no tile factories in Mason City at that time. We talked to the Burlington agent, but he knew of no tile or where to get them. He promised he would try to find out what he could do, and the different prices. He found some tile at Reinbeck. We ordered some of these, and they were the first tile in Hancock county.

After a few years they started to build a town east of the Burlington depot. When the town was incorporated, SW 1/4 section 30 was taken in. We sold twenty-five acres and these were laid out in lots, leaving us 100 acres of one-fourth section.

"In the year 1892 we bought NW 1/4 section for $25.00 an acre. We bought many more pieces of land.

In 1914 we moved to town where I had bought 20 lots, in-

STATE DUCK LAWS MADE TO CONFORM WITH FEDERAL

The Conservation Commission at a recent meeting adopted an Administrative Order which changes the State laws for taking migratory waterfowl as they appear in the Code, to conform with the Federal regulation for 1939. The Administrative Order was based on the investigation of the United States Biological Service and the Conservation Commission. The investigation determined that the population of migratory waterfowl was at variance with that which existed at the time the State law took effect.

Under the present laws the Conservation Commission is designated the agency to determine whether a population of wildlife exists contrary to the biological balance which existed when the law was passed. The laws also give the Commission the authority to adopt Administrative Orders to extend, shorten, open or close seasons, change bag or possession limits in accordance with its findings.

As the State law now stands, for the taking of migratory waterfowl, the season will open on October 15th and close on November 28th. The daily bag limit for ducks is ten per person, of which not more than three in the aggregate or of any one shall be Canvasback, Redhead, Bufflehead and Ruddy Duck. The possession limit is twenty, of which not more than six may be of the above named species.

For geese and brant the open season is the same as ducks. The daily bag limit is five with ten as the possession limit.

Coot or mudhen are limited to twenty-five for one day and the possession limit is one day's bag limit or twenty-five.

Snipe are limited to 15 in any one day with the possession limit as 15.

Ducks, geese, brant and coot may be taken only between the hours of 7 a. m. and 4 p. m. each day during the open season. Snipe may be taken from 7 a. m. to sunset each day.

There is no open season on Grebe, Rails, Gallinules or Woodcock in Iowa.

$5,000 SCHOOL HOUSE IN LIBERTY TOWNSHIP

The No. 8 school house in Liberty township has been replaced by a fine brick building at a cost of about $5,000 and conforms to requirements of a standardized school. This brings all schools in Liberty township on the standard list which entitles each from a state fund a pro rata of between $21 and $38.

KLEMMME WOMAN IS PRIZE WINNER AT THE NORTH IOWA FAIR

Mrs. Quentin Stille, who has been weaving rugs here the past several months, entered a number of her rugs at the North Iowa Fair last week and captured a first prize in each class in which she entered rugs.

Mrs. Stille took the blue ribbon on woolen rugs, first on embroidered pictured rugs and also won first place on a crocketed chair set.

The judges informed Mrs. Stille that her entries were superior in both color combination and workmanship to any rugs on display and that she would have won more than one place except for the rule that only one textile prize was awarded by each entrant this year.

Supt. W. H. Galbreth Announces Plans For Opening Of Schools

SCHOOL HERE TO OPEN MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 5

Will Be Last Year Of Service For Present Building

Klemme High School opens its doors Monday, September 5, for its last year of service in its present location. There will be a forward look in the eyes of every pupil as classes are resumed at the old stand, and the architects drawing of Klemme's new modern school will be the most interesting picture on the assembly walls.

The last vacancy in the teaching staff was filled last week with the signing of Marvin Batchelder of Marion as the instructor of science and music. Mr. Batchelder was a musician and science major at Coe College and the University of Iowa and he has taken post graduate work at the University

Klemme Voters Endorse Bonds For New School

BORDER STATES DUCK SEASON SAME AS IOWA

Nebraska, Illinois and Missouri will enjoy the same dates of open season for ducks and geese as Iowa this year. The dates of the open season is from October 15th to November 28th, both dates inclusive.

In South Dakota, Wisconsin and Minnesota, the season will be 15 days earlier with the opening date fixed as October 1st and the closing date as November 14th.

Daily bag limits and possession limits are the same in all States as are the shooting hours.

VOTERS FAVOR BUILDING NEW SCHOOL HOUSE BY LARGE MAJORITY

Large Number Voted, But Election Was Quiet Affair

Klemme voters last Thursday approved the proposed $30,000 bond issue to be applied on the building of a modern school here by an over-whelming majority of 206 votes for, and only 47 votes against the proposition.

A government grant for $32,715 has already been approved by the authorities at Washington. The school treasury has on hand $10,000, and with the $30,000 bond issue approved by the voters at the special election, the Board will have a total amount of $72,715 with which to construct a new building and purchase a suitable site for the new building.

The large vote in favor of the bond issue last Thursday is also a splendid vote of confidence in the Klemme School Board. The board has endeavored to give a clear picture of the school situation here. Boosters for a new school have been sincere in their statements.

The site for the new building, has not been decided at this writing, but the new site will provide ample room for a large, safe playground, an athletic field and plenty of parking space.

The large vote Thursday displayed the fact that the people of Klemme are progressive, that they believe in education and that they know a good business deal when they see one.

In all probability, work on the new building should get under way in a few weeks, and much of the construction can take place this fall.

The new building will be modern in every respect and is of an approved design. There will be ample class and study rooms for all the grades and the high school, a large gymnasium and auditorium that can take care of a large crowd. It will be a building that Klemme can point to with pride, and it can be built without causing any hardship on any taxpayer in the district.

Klemme has taken another step forward!

HELLO, FOLKS!

A baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Leslie DeMerritt at the University hospital at Iowa City on Saturday, August 13th. The little Miss has been named Beverly Jean.

SQUIRREL SEASON NEXT

The open season on gray and fox squirrels will open on September 15th. It is the second season to open for the year, the rabbit season having opened on August 1st.

The daily bag limit on squirrels is six per day per person with twelve fixed as the possession limit.

Conservation authorities report a good supply of squirrels this year. Conditions generally have been almost ideal for squirrels as well as all game.

Authorities also warn that squirrels may not be sold and also that every person regardless of sex or age is required to have a hunting license to hunt squirrels as well as all other game.

Either shot gun or rifle may be used according to the laws.

Answer to What-to-Wear Problem

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

DEAR, oh dear me, here's that tantalizing, baffling between season "what-to-wear" question bobbing up again! Cheer up, for the problem is all nicely solved. Fashion gives the answer "just as easy as that" in two short words—dark sheer.

The four costumes pictured will smartly apparel a "best dressed" woman way into autumn and then it's a safe guess that you will be wearing these pretty frocks under winter coats now and then until blizzard weather sets in.

Should it be that your budget limits choice to just one of the costumes pictured we would recommend the dressy silk sheer tuxedo jacket dress shown at top to the right. For all-around about-town practical general wear you will find that it will prove very nearly perfect. The jacket with its smart, new bracelet-length sleeves will serve as a mid-season wrap and look as smart over your colorful silk print frock as it does with its own matching dress. As here ensembled the white lingerie touches give a flattering neckline. Pink doeskin gloves and a salad bowl hat trimmed in pink add eye-appealing contrast.

You will derive infinite satisfaction wearing an afternoon dress like the model worn by the stylish young matron seated to the right in the foreground. It is styled smartly of sheer black crepe. Lots and lots of tucks form a front plastron to the blouse. Tucks in profusion also embellish the sleeves and add hem interest to the skirt. A pink clip finishes off the low neckline. Gloves of matching pink and a bonnet that is faced with a mass of pretty pink posies carry out the color scheme most intelligently.

You'll be wanting a dinner dress for special invitation affairs, and to our way of thinking the model to the left gives satisfactory answer. This gown of navy blue silk sheer is so conservatively styled it will "fit in" to most any niche—will prove wearable for afternoon as well as informal night occasions. A softly pleated bodice extends from a yoke. The fact that latest news from abroad places special emphasis on the importance of yokes in the advance styling program stamps this gown as of last-minute origin. A gay corsage of flowers and a slim skirt that has graceful pleats released below the hip line give to this costume definite style prestige.

Centered in the background we show an important afternoon dress of black suede-surfaced heavy silk sheer with the new vertically shirred front that achieves a flattering slenderized figure line. It ranks among the best examples of draping. It is this type of draping that characterizes the new and much heralded daytime dresses of sleek figure-reducing rayon or, better still, pure silk jersey. For a mid-season or fall fashion-first dress this is the sort that is selling at sight. The draped silk jersey turban worn with the model pictured is unusually good style.

New fall types just arriving stress fringe-trimmed black silk sheers. The fringe is so worked into the plan of things that it seems an integral part of the dress and it is manipulated to accent slenderness.

SILK DAY COATS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A fashion that is proving most welcome and timely for mid-season wear is the long coat of handsome black silk, either crepe, faille or ottoman weave. The model pictured gives the new corseted waistline via vertical tucks. Note also the flared skirt, with the new full-at-front silhouette. The baroque patent leather belt and the white pique boutonniere add swank to this outfit. Worn over the midsummer favorite print frock you have a costume that "carries on" triumphantly through the between-season interval.

Short Tennis Dresses

The most popular tennis dress is that with the skirt two or three inches above the knees, store experience reveals.

Sheer Housecoats

The movies are responsible for a trend toward sheer housecoats worn over ruffled petticoats.

PEASANT FASHIONS CONTINUE POPULAR

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The spirit of "let's be gay" persists throughout sports attire that flashes bright peasant colorings and amusing silhouettes that are quaintly picturesque. Dirndls? Yes, they answer "present" in the fall collections. The newest and smartest versions are done in lively wool challis prints. Some are girdled with black velvet ribbon and flaunt metal buttons—enough to strike any style-aspiring schoolgirl's fancy.

The Swedish motifs, with their gay embroideries, are popular as ever, and tall crowned alpine hats flaunting gay feathers are the milliners' pride for fall. The fascination of the peasant outfits lies in the fact they are often exact replicas and the more young girls look like gaily attired peasants "just landed" the smarter they are attired according to fashion's verdict.

Street Length Clothes Go Picturesque for Fall Wear

Paris dressmakers are seeing to it that informal and street length clothes are every bit as glamorous and exciting as evening gowns.

Bruyere answers the challenge with picturesqueness—a full skirted taffeta dress worn over a starched petticoat. White stockings and a poke bonnet complete the old-fashioned picture.

Paquin solves the problem with sophistication in a series of dressy afternoon suits with draped jackets and small but rippling collars of fox.

Purple and Plum Shades in Offing for Early Autumn

The injection of purple and plum shades into midsummer costumes is merely a hint of an important fashion that will be featured by early autumn.

Everywhere in fashion circles there is talk of purple tones for daytime dresses, for sports costumes and for accessories. In addition to the general interest in the shade for informal daytime occasions, many velvet afternoon dresses and evening gowns are to flaunt this royal hue.

FARM TOPICS

RENOVATING THIN PASTURE ADVISED

Seeding of Legumes May Be Solution of Problem.

By R. F. Fuelleman, Assistant in Crop Production, University of Illinois, with Service.

Renovation of thin sods and bare spots by means of scarification and the seeding of legumes may be the solution of the pasture problem on many farms.

Renovation is especially useful on pastures that should not be plowed or that have only small areas that are in need of attention. Such areas can be located this summer for treatment in the fall.

First step is to test the soil and apply needed limestone in the fall. Phosphates can be applied prior to scarification, which consists of tearing up the grass sod with a disc set at a sharp angle. The ground is then harrowed.

Usually the three dry weather legumes—alfalfa, sweet clover and red clover—are seeded along with some timothy. In most cases it will pay to firm the seed bed by rolling after the seeding. Grasses may be seeded in this process, but the prime objective of renovation is the establishment of deep rooted, drought-resistant, nitrogen gathering legumes. Timothy is usually seeded with the legumes since it insures a greater percentage of grass during the first and second years than would ordinarily be present. After renovation it is well to manage the pasture in such a way that the legumes have an opportunity to reseed themselves.

This practice is not recommended on good pasture sods which may need only a little rest. Neither is it recommended for steep hillsides.

Hens Need Special Care

During Hot Summer Days

In summer weather, it is well to give some consideration to the hens, whether on range or in confinement, advises a poultryman in Wallace's Farmer.

First, examine their quarters for mites. If any are present, get right after them with a good painting of the roosts with some anti-mite preparation. Hens can scarcely stand both mites and hot weather, much less lay eggs. Lice, too, should be exterminated if any are present.

Another menace to the summer health of hens is the open corn crib. If a hen frequents the crib daily, she is apt to eat too much corn and to become too fat to lay, and perhaps so fat that she will drop dead. Many young poultry raisers, not noticing how their birds run to the crib, say: "I don't know what's the matter with my hens; they are dying so!" Their grandmothers probably could tell them that the trouble is too much corn.

In summer, some grief is caused by the broody hen. If not broken up immediately, broodiness almost always ruins a good layer. She will hold to the nest without laying, and will dwindle in size until weak. Some poultry raisers simply gather up their broody hens and sell them. But, if what a culler once said at one farm is true, that policy is unwise. He said, "Your hens have almost culled themselves. The best ones have gone to sitting."

To break up broodiness, place the hens in a slat-bottomed coop so that the air can circulate under it. Offer the birds plenty of mash and fresh water.

Hog Cholera

Cholera is to hogs what blackhead is to turkeys, except that hog growers are luckier than turkey growers in that one can vaccinate against hog cholera, whereas this cannot be done for turkeys, advises a writer in the Missouri Farmer. Blackhead can be prevented by an operation—the blind intestines can be tied off almost entirely, which prevents the cecal worms from gaining access to these pouches, but the operation is both expensive and risky and is therefore impractical. Strict sanitation will prevent blackhead, however—sanitation and a balanced ration—which is also the case with nearly all diseases.

Agricultural Briefs

Parts of Australia have not sufficient water for the sheep this year.

Changing hens from one home to another is sure to stop production.

A dairy cow drinks about 11½ tons of water a year, an average of 8 gallons a day.

Meat which is to be home cured should be thoroughly cooled out but not allowed to freeze before being put in brine.

Average weight of farm work horses in New York state is about 1,400 pounds; the weights vary between 1,200 and 1,500 pounds.

Illinois poultrymen have been feeding whole oats in separate hoppers along with other grains. They report that the birds stay in better condition as a result.

Star Dust

★ Judge Hardy Craze

★ Gary's a Wrangler

★ Glamour to Order

—By Virginia Vale—

YEARS ago, when the "Amos and Andy" craze started, enthusiasts used to defend themselves against skeptics by saying that they liked the radio program because it was so human.

Now the movie-goers, in droves, are saying the same thing about the pictures based on the lives of the

MICKEY ROONEY

Hardy family. The latest one, "Love Finds Andy Hardy," is making plenty of friends for the series, and may lead to demands that earlier Judge Hardy and Family pictures be revived.

The cast is good; Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney, Cecilia Parker, Anne Rutherford, Lana Turner, Ross Clark, Raymond Hatton. You'll feel that you know them as well as you know your neighbors.

Mickey Rooney is superb. His performance might well be listed as among the best of the year. Don't miss "Love Finds Andy Hardy."

Gary Cooper is perfectly happy, now that he is making "The Cowboy and the Lady" and wearing the kind of clothes he wanted to for his role; not the expensive togs that the studio's wardrobe department picked out for him, but the kind that a cowboy really would wear.

They are telling an amusing story around New York about Jon Hall. It happened when he and Frances Langford were honeymooning there, and were guests at a lake not far from the city. Hall took a canoe out one day, and the attendant stopped him, saying that he couldn't do that until he'd taken the canoe test. So Hall, who grew up in Tahiti and of whose skill in the water you know if you saw "Hurricane," took the canoe test as obediently as if he hadn't practically lived in one from the time he was born.

The new Boyer picture, "Algiers," has been the inspiration for a new dance, a slow fox-trot very much like the tango. Kay Kayser, whose radio popularity is spreading rapidly, played with his orchestra when it was introduced in New York.

Glamour can be cultivated, these days, if the girl who wants it happens to be in Hollywood. There's a man named Al Siegel who has made a business of it; teaches his pupils how to walk, how to use makeup, how to put a song over—how to do practically everything that most of the girls on the screen and in radio have to do these days. He is credited with developing such stars as Ethel Merman, Dorothy Lamour and Shirley Ross, and among his pupils at present are Marsha Hunt, Andrea Martin and Patricia Ellis. Much of his work is with people who have made a hit in radio, been signed up for pictures, and don't know the tricks of the trade.

Patricia Ellis

When "Salome" was presented in 1905, puritanical New York was shocked, and the mere idea of its being given here caused a row. Its presentation in New York in 1921 was taken calmly. Strauss' "Merry Psychographies," as the critics called them, didn't bring any riot calls. These muddled phantasmagorias of his earlier years got him into many battles, but he settled down to writing and—being a good business man—to money making. Once, when he was quarreling with Berlin, he was asked if he would play there. "I would play on a manure pile if they pay me for it," he said.

He is no kin of the famous waltz family of Vienna. In mellow and beery old Bavaria, his father was a horn-blower and his mother a brewer's daughter. He has prospered through his later years, the owner of a castle in Vienna and an estate in Bavaria.

In 1930, German cities were fighting for him as their leading citizen, with chambers of commerce competing and making offers. Then came the brief eclipse over the "non-Aryan" associations, and now the full effulgence of his restored career.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

NEW YORK.—The playing fields of Eton have been given due credit for Britain's power and durability. We seem to have overlooked the playing fields of West Point.

Army to Ape Strategy Of Football

A sweeping technical reorganization of the army is news this week. It might not have come off had it not been for a certain incident on the West Point football field. Gen. Malin Craig, chief of staff, is the reorganizer. He is preparing the army for the open game—swiftness, mobility, adaptiveness, as in modern football.

It was an instant of inspired open football, back in the juggernaut days of the guards back and the side-line buck, that saved young Malin Craig for the army and the current reordering of tactics and equipment.

Just before the game with Trinity college in 1897, the West Point scholastic command had decided to retire Cadet Craig. Of an ancient army line, with many relatives in the service, he had been visiting around army posts. His marks had suffered. The ax was to fall just after the game.

Craig was a brilliant backfield player, but somewhat given to unplanned maneuvers. Carrying the ball at a critical turn of the game, he lost his interference in a broken field. He shook off several tacklers, but, somewhere around the 35-yard line, a stone wall of Trinity players loomed ahead.

Ducking a hurtling body, scarcely checking his stride, he booted a perfect field goal—winning the game, with appropriate Frank Merriwell trimmings. Of course, the faculty couldn't fire a hero. The ax was put away, a tutor was found, and Cadet Craig finished creditably—to establish the open game in the American army.

Young Craig Boots Goal On the Run

He was a baseball star, also, and old Pop Anson tried to sign him for the Chicago National team. Born in St. Joseph, Mo., he was the grandson of a Civil war general. His father was a major and he has a son recently out of West Point.

In the Spanish-American war, the Philippines, France and in minor mixups, he was a quick thinker and a self-starter, heavily garlanded from the first and known as a "progressive" tactician.

A FEW years ago, Richard Strauss was in trouble with the Nazis. The libretto of his opera, "The Silent Woman," had been written by Stefan Zweig, a "non-Aryan." The opera was a flop and Herr Strauss was ousted as president of the Reich Culture chamber and chairman of the Federation of German Composers. He is now restored to official favor.

Strauss Is Restored to Nazi Favor

His librettist for his new opera, "Der Fridenstag," is a certified Aryan, Joseph Gregor, a Viennese poet, and its world premier at Munich is a brilliant success, with new garlands for the seventy-five-year-old composer.

So apparently all is forgiven, and the traditional rebel of the musical world is rebelling no longer. He had decided to save the world at any cost, but turning sixty, he concluded he was doing well enough by merely keeping out of jail.

When "Salome" was presented in 1905, puritanical New York was shocked, and the mere idea of its being given here caused a row. Its presentation in New York in 1921 was taken calmly. John S. Mill, Child Prodigy, Tells of Life

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

THOMAS EDISON'S definition of genius was: "Genius is another name for hard work." To which the public usually adds, "Plus his own superior intelligence." In the case of John Stuart Mill, there was hard work added to great natural ability. His father used remarkable methods in training the boy's unusual mind. Of these methods and much more, Mill wrote in his "Autobiography."

The writer stated that he did not remember when he began the study of languages, but at the age of three he was reading English and Greek. When John was eight years old he was required to teach his lessons the morning to his younger brother and sisters in the afternoon. If he did not know their lessons properly when the father heard them in the evening John was held to blame. In this manner John absorbed his knowledge to a degree of mastery.

On long walks with his son, the father talked to John of learning matters, asking the boy's opinion on various points. At all times the material was over the head of the child, causing him to stretch mentally to reach it.

Definite Study Plan.

The course of study was laid out for a period of years. One subject at a time was thoroughly covered. For example, the literature of the world was covered in succession that of England coming first, that of Greece, Rome, France and other nations coming in order.

CHILD PRODIGY

John Stuart Mill was born in 1806 in London. His father, a writer of note in his own generation, was his teacher until he entered the university. As a boy he was known as a child prodigy, about which Mill writes in his "Autobiography."

The Encyclopaedia Britannica says that Mill understates the amount of knowledge that he had at various ages in childhood and also understates the amount of study and reading that he had done. "About the age of twelve, John began a thorough study of the scholastic logic, at the same time reading Aristotle's treatises in the original."

The last years of his life were spent in retirement in a little cottage where he had music, books, friends, and long walks in the beauty of the countryside. His stepdaughter was his companion and solace after the death of his wife. Mill lived until 1873.

When his son was old enough to take university life, the wise father explained to John that he knew much that other boys did not know because of his father's kindness in taking so much time to teach him. There was never any feeling of John's part that he had done anything unusual.

When he first went away from home, he felt that many adults considered him somewhat impudent. He states that he did not understand this at the time but later he saw it was because of his outspoken comments on mature topics.

Failure of Democratic Purge Gives Republicans New Fear

Politics

If Franklin Roosevelt ever planned to "purge" his Democratic party of undesirables, he now knows the purge has failed. On the presidential black list may have been John G. Gillette, Nevada's McCarran, Iowa's Adams, and Missouri's Clark. By last week these New Deal haters were either renominated or reassured of winning their state primaries at the expense of administration favorites.

News of purge failure has recently sent the most dour conservative into ecstasies. For once, it appears, Franklin Roosevelt's domination over the party is at ebb tide. But last week a few foes began thinking instead of effervescing:

Is purge failure helping untangle badly twisted United States political lines? Decidedly the contrary. Is purge failure eliminating Franklin Roosevelt as a third term? Probably not.

Originally the purge idea sought to transform the Democrat party into an instrument of coherent liberalism, implying formation of an equally coherent conservative party on the other side. But when congress convenes next winter the United States will see instead a hodge-podge of multi-colored political thought from which little but bickering can be expected.

Deeply tanned from his 20-day fishing trip to tropical Pacific waters, Franklin Roosevelt was back on his 48 states last week, still mum about third term rumors that have kept newsmen busy since he left. Of all rumors, most thought-provoking was that purge failure robs the President of party control, robs him also of the right to name a successor in 1940. Not willing to be robbed, enthusiastic New Dealer Roosevelt would rather run himself than pass the mantle to a less ardent New Dealer.

Kentucky

Blue Grass politics was red hot as Kentucky prepared to choose a Democratic senator. At Jackson, former Sheriff Lee Combs and his brother attended a rally for their own faction, then walked brazenly into a rally of opposition forces. When the smoke cleared, Lee Combs was shot dead. A few minutes later his father organized kinfolk to search for William Combs, who was no relative but the alleged slayer.

another. Finally Ambassador Mamoru Shigemitsu at Moscow received word to open peace negotiations. Last week it appeared proud, stubborn Japan would have to eat crow if she wanted peace with prouder, more stubborn Russia. Muttering that "the time has come to terminate these endless incidents," Foreign Minister Litvinov matched Tokyo's proposals with an even better set:

(1) Immediate cessation of hostilities, with mutual withdrawal behind a fixed line.

(2) That line to be determined by the Russ-China treaty of June 26, 1886.

(3) Appointment of a bilateral commission, two Russians, one Manchukuan, one Jap, to negotiate for redemarcation of the line on basis of the 1886 treaty.

While Japan boasted after two weeks that 1,500 Russ soldiers had been killed and wounded against 180 on her own side, two tattered Soviet deserters walked into her Siberian camp to air their grievances against Moscow.

They deserted because their fathers, well-to-do Kulak farmers, had been heavily taxed, heavily oppressed in the Soviet drive for collective agriculture. "Our slogan is defend the fatherland of liberty," one said, "but how can we soldiers defend such a system when the cows, horses and even their barns are taken away."

To Japan it looked like Russia's poor Siberian administration was her ally.

Last week weary Japanese troops were still more than 100 miles down the flooded Yangtze river from their goal, Nanking, long since deserted by the Chinese government. While defending troops claimed the invaders had been repelled in battle after battle, crafty Japs were evidently resorting to brains instead of brawn to capture another part of China.

In the past Manchuria and Peking governments were undermined by palm-rubbing Tokyo agents and disgruntled Chinese officials. Result in each case has been a puppet state, completely divorced from China. Last week at peaceful Canton, only a few miles from Britain's Hongkong, came reports of secret negotiations to sway South China from the central government.

Promising to prevent recurrence of disastrous bombings which left Canton a bloody shambles last month, Jap agents would set up an independent government closely allied to Tokyo.

Meanwhile Japan refused to stop her bombing attacks on Canton. For two successive days last week war planes swooped down with their cargoes of death, finally striking within 400 yards of the foreign settlement where thousands had taken refuge. Next day Canton's Catholic cathedral was struck while hundreds cowered in terror within.

Miscellany

Back to London last week from darkest Africa came Missionary John Harris with a strange tale. His story: In Bechuanaland lives Ramonolwana Senan, believed to be 140 years old yet still in good health and boasting all but one tooth. He has a son more than 100 years old, and a daughter 16.

Twenty thousand bathers at New York's Rockaway beach sought relief from sticky weather last week. In the distance were unimportant rumblings of thunder. Suddenly the air was splintered by a bolt of lightning that zig-zagged 300 feet down the beach, killing three, felling hundreds. Next day investigators wondered if a huge steel bridge, passing almost immediately over the beach, might have drawn the freak bolt.

When she was first launched, England's proud Queen Mary was also queen of the Atlantic. Then came the French Normandie to set a westward passage record of 3 days, 22 hours, 56 minutes. Last week her powerful engines churned the Queen Mary to a new record, clipping 1 hour, 14 minutes off the Normandie's mark.

Fondled like the museum piece it is, Douglas (Wrong Way) Corrigan's $900 transatlantic airplane was unloaded in Manhattan last week.

People

At Callander, Ont., Olivia Dionne's famous five children failed to appear before their daily tourist audience. Dr. Roy Dafeo, who has guided the four-year-old quintuplets since birth, reported they suffered from upset stomachs. Next day Pappa Dionne worried publicly over Emilie, who had taken no nourishment for 24 hours.

Two days after former cinema actress Pearl White died in Paris, Warner Oland of "Charlie Chan" fame succumbed in his native Sweden of bronchial pneumonia.

At Hammond, La., Governor Richard W. Leche poured coffee, served sandwiches to pickets surrounding a box factory.

Religion

On the next day... when they heard that Jesus was coming... took branches of palm trees, and went forth to meet Him, and cried, Hosanna: Blessed is the king of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord.

Thus wrote St. John in Biblical days. Since then his words have been unchanged, but last week American clergymen began studying the Bible as rewritten under Adolph Hitler's direction to conform with Germany's Nazi ideology. Said the Nazified St. John:

"Then they took green branches, went to meet him and cried: HELL to him that comes in the name of God. HELL to thee, thou shalt be our king."

Eliminated are all references to sin, heaven and the Hebrew prophets, for the Nazi heaven is now to be found in Germany alone.

Domestic

That Pennsylvania's Sen. James J. Davis has been more successful with U. S. Moose than his Tennessee Valley authority investigating committee, was admitted last week. From Washington to Knoxville, in the heart of TVA's far-flung power empire, the committee has dug for facts, rumors and figures to establish why ousted TVA Administrator Arthur Morgan raised such a hullabaloo last winter.

The committee's aim, said Davis, was to find the "real, true 'yardstick' cost of power and the total amount of money going into TVA development."

Last week, after spending more than half the $50,000 appropriation, Chairman Davis decided 85 per cent of his rummaging was concerned with uninteresting auditing and accounting. Named to investigate for the investigating committee was a private investigator, M. C. Conick, whose personal headache TVA now becomes.

Labor

The nasty word "Communism" hung like a spectre last week before the eyes of C. I. O. Mogul John L. Lewis. At Detroit and Los Angeles his henchmen were having trouble.

Ex-Precursor Homer Martin, who heads 375,000 members of the C. I. O. United Automobile Workers, found himself marked for liquidation by the four vice presidents he recently found guilty of consorting with Communists. Their charge: That Martin himself has been consorting with President Jay Lovestone of the Independent Communist Labor league.

To bewildered C. I. O. workers it appeared that U. A. W.'s trouble was simply a fight between Stalinist Communists and Lovestone Communists, each willing to fight for their own beliefs no matter how many unions are destroyed. Standing on the sidelines at Detroit awaiting the opportune moment was A. F. of L.'s Francis Dillon who headed the U. A. W. when it was a respectable Labor Federation affiliate.

Meanwhile at Los Angeles, four C. I. O. unions voted to withdraw from Radical Harry Bridges' Industrial Union council, charging he had brought the body under Communist control.

Aviation

Since its birth shortly after the World war, U. S. commercial aviation has been bounced back and forth by a dozen government agencies, has suffered from repudiated agreements and constantly changing administration. Worst low was the government's repudiation of air-mail contracts five years ago, an experiment that ended in headaches for all.

Last winter congress established a Civil Aeronautics authority to manage commercial aviation permanently and sensibly. Its job: To administer air mail contracts, supervise commercial air lines and private fliers and study aviation safety.

Last week the new authority took over its job, two weeks before the act goes into effect. As Chairman Elmer J. Noble of Greenwich, Conn., walked into his office for the first time he hoped to regulate aviation as successfully as another policy-forming board, the Interstate Commerce commission, has supervised railroading.

Sports

Several weeks ago a young Chicago broker, Fred Tuerk, bet his partner half a $30,000 plantation he couldn't play 144 holes of golf from dawn to dusk without going over 95 on any 18 holes. Partner J. Smith Ferebee took him up, starting out one morning last week. By nightfall all 144 holes were played at an average of 86 strokes per 13 holes. Next day Broker Ferebee, still golf hungry, played again to "unlimber" after his ordeal.

HOW to SEW By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

WE ARE indebted to one of the readers of this column for this idea. She was so enthusiastic about the book, SEWING, for the Home Decorator, offered with these articles that she wrote a nice letter of appreciation and also described this clever idea of her own for making her kitchen gay.

The curtains themselves are as easy to wash and iron as a dish towel—no frills, just hems. But don't make them too skimpy. A full width of 35-inch-wide material is not too wide. Cut away the selvage at the front edge and hem it with a 1-inch hem. Use a 2-inch hem at the bottom. This gives the curtains body so they will have smart crisp lines. The casing at the top should be just wide enough for the curtain rod. And don't forget to allow for shrinkage if the material is not pre-shrunk.

If figured material is used, choose colors that will harmonize with the shelf edging along the top of the window and the tie-backs as shown in the sketch. The thumb tacks used for the shelf edging may also add color interest.

NOTE: Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' book, SEWING, for the Home Decorator. Forty-eight pages of directions for making slip-covers and curtains; dressing tables; lampshades and many other useful articles for the home. Price 25 cents postpaid (coin preferred). Ask for Book 1, and address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

On the Highway

Some of the most important rules for safe driving:

Never drive fast over a road you don't know like a book.

Learn what you can expect of your car.

Always expect the worst. If there's a tree beside the road ahead, figure a car may come from behind it. If there's a house near by, a child may run across the road there. If there's a parked car, count on its cutting suddenly onto the pavement.

Signal your intentions to all persons who may be affected by your acts.

How Women in Their 40's Can Attract Men

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 36 to 42), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells. Get more fresh air 8 hrs. sleep and if you need a good general system tonic take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vitality to enjoy life. It also calms jittery nerves and disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life. WELL WORTH TRYING!

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out. Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance. The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed by the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

Last week I asked for information regarding Wood Lake, which was listed as one of the lakes in Hancock county and which contained 52 acres.

I got two rises, the first from Asa Arnold, and the second from Editor R. R. Roberts of Britt, who writes as follows: "For your information I would advise that Wood Lake is some forty acres of ground lying close to Eagle Lake to the west. It was traded to W. J. Rasmuson for a tract of the ground that constitutes Eagle Lake State Park, has been drained and gone out of existence as a lake. The old lake bed makes good pasture."

Asa Arnold turned in about the same information and he located the lake on an old county plat which shows the place listed as "Lake Wood," near Eagle Lake.

Thanks, both of you.

I-S-A-S

The Klemme street cleaning department has been increased in capacity by the addition of one husky young man. It all came about when a young farm hand of the community became imbued with too much spirit of the Britt Hobo Convention and ended his celebration in Klemme. He preferred to work out the sentence imposed upon him for his waywardness and so spent Tuesday sweeping the pavement.

Wisecrackers, however, point out that the town marshal seems to be getting the worst of the deal, as he too put in long hours of hard toil in a blistering sun in order to keep the young man busy!

I-S-A-S

School days are just around the corner, and the writer is right back to twelve years ago when our "little boy" was getting ready to start to school. The little fellow is now six foot two inches tall, and is again ready to "start school." However, this time it is a regular headache and the problem looks much bigger than it did twelve years ago, but it is just another step in the scheme of life and just another hurdle that many other youngsters must take.

I-S-A-S

Now that the school election is past history, I look back and snicker at the needless worry so many of us went through. It was a bigger victory than anyone had hoped for. The big worry was to get out enough "yes" voters to swing the deal. It just goes to show what a lot of noise a mere handful of "no" men can make.

I-S-A-S

We nimrods are again beginning to "eye the calender" as fall approaches . . . and there is that matter of a fishing trip which I lost out on last spring when the gods of fate decreed that I must be kept from my favorite sport because of an infected leg.

I feel myself slipping and I doubt very much that I will be able to shake off that longing for the north woods and ice cold lakes. Time will tell . . . but there is a pair of "muskies" over in Wisconsin that are already tagged for one Art Wille of Garner and R. A. Jorgenson of Klemme.

FARM SAFETY URGED

The average Iowa farmer probably would scorn the adoption of industry's steel-toed safety shoes, hard hats, goggles with unbreakable lenses, and other safety devices.

But the matter might deserve consideration, the Iowa State Safety council recommended in a report today, in view of the fact of 19,500 fatal occupational accidents during 1937, 4,500 occurred on farms.

The figures were released this week by the national safety council for the entire United States.

Machinery and animals were the most common cause of fatal farm accidents, the safety council reported. Machinery accidents caused 29 per cent of the deaths, and animals figured in 21 per cent.

In order, other farm hazards and the percentage of fatalities they caused were:

Excessive heat, 11 per cent; falls, 9 per cent; vehicular, 8 per cent; lightning, 5 per cent; crushed by falling trees, 4 per cent; all others, 13 per cent.

U. S. WEALTHY NATION

Although the U. S. has only 5.8 per cent of the world's land surface and 6.2 per cent of the world's population, she has:

69.85 per cent of the automobiles.
37.7 per cent of the railways.
35.5 per cent of Grade A roads.
49.8 per cent of the telephones.
32.5 per cent of telegraph and cable.
53.8 per cent of the gold reserve.
32.7 per cent of the electric power.
13.0 per cent of the wheat.
15.1 per cent of the barley.
25.5 per cent of the oats.
38.4 per cent of the corn.
12.2 per cent of the sugar beets.
28.2 per cent of the tobacco.
40.9 per cent of the cotton.
12.2 per cent of the wool.
8.7 per cent of the cattle.
20.0 per cent of the hogs.
7.0 per cent of the sheep.
28.7 per cent of the coal.
60.5 per cent of the crude petroleum.

Verily a great nation.

Some Poor Potato Yields Are Due to Diseased Seed

Although the weather was cool and moisture abundant in early spring—ideal for potatoes—some fields are not yielding as well as expected in Iowa, according to reports reaching Iowa State College.

One of the reasons for the lower yields than expected in some places is that a lot of potato seed stock was poor this year, explained Dr. I. E. Melhus, head of plant disease work at Iowa State College.

Virus diseases have been abundant, and live over in the seed. The virus diseases are spread by insects, he says.

Another reason for lowered yields in some cases is that many potatoes rotted in the ground. After potatoes are cut they should not be planted immediately, but should be allowed to stand until the cut surfaces have crusted over. This "green" seed which rotted caused poor stands in some fields.

H. L. SUCKOW, JUSTICE, IS REMOVED FROM OFFICE

Charged With Embezzlement Of Public Funds

Last week at a meeting of the Supervisors, H. L. Suckow, Justice of the Peace in Klemme, was removed from office by that body.

He was brought before Justice John Ford at Garner, charged with embezzlement of public funds and bound over to the grand jury.

Friday, however, he pleaded guilty before County Attorney Bill Daly and appeared before District Judge Graven of Mason City, who sentenced Suckow to one year in the jail at Forest City, but suspended the sentence as this was Suckow's first offense and paroled him to Sheriff Brower.

The amount embezzled was over a period of time and was for less than $200. Fines collected for motor vehicle offenses were part of the funds Suckow did not account for.

RIFLE SEASON NEAR

With the advent of the squirrel season also comes the time of year when rifles become popular.

Rifles are dangerous as are all firearms. Rifles are more so because of the distance they carry and effectiveness. It is for that reason that specific provisions are made in the laws for the use of rifles. It is unlawful for any person to shoot a rifle over any public highway in the State. It is also unlawful to shoot a rifle across any public waters.

It is a wise thing to not shoot a rifle in any direction except up—unless vision ahead is clear or it is certain the shot is going to strike a dirt bank.

Above all, do not fire a rifle in the direction of a farm lot or at any moving object which cannot be distinguished.

Squirrel hunting with a rifle is great sport, in fact only rifles were

So for safety's sake when hunting squirrels with a rifle and to enjoy the great thrill of the sport, shoot at the squirrel up in the tree and count the squirrel that runs along the ground as the one which got away.

BURNING STRAW AND OTHER CROP RESIDUES CONDEMNED

Burning crop residues such as cornstalks, small grain stubble and strawpiles means "harder" farming and lower cash income in years to come.

So declares Lester Clapp, extension soil conservationist at Iowa State College.

Clapp points out that tests made of virgin soils and those farmed for 30 or 40 years have shown that organic matter is being lost at the rate of about 1 per cent per year on even the level soil and at a faster rate on sloping ground.

Clapp explains that as soil loses its organic matter content it becomes lifeless, cloddy, has less moisture holding capacity and farms harder. These conditions result in less plant food being available to produce crops.

Clapp condemns the practice of burning grain stubble and straw after combining or binding the grain. He urges that this material be left on the surface to decay and prevent washing of the soil.

In addition to increasing the organic matter content, the straw and other crop residue material stimulate and increase the activity of the bacteria and other microorganisms in the soil. Their presence is essential in a highly fertile and productive soil he says.

PHOSPHATE FIRST FERTILIZER CONSTITUENT THAT IS NEEDED

Iowa is in the phosphate stage of fertilizer use, say soils workers at Iowa State College.

After Virgin lands are cropped for a period of years, they begin to show signs of depleted fertility constituents unless some return of these constituents is made. Phosphate is the first fertility constituent to become depleted.

While few farmers in the state have begun using complete commercial fertilizers, many have discovered the necessity for phosphorus. Iowa soils need phosphate to provide better and more profitable yields per acre, and they usually give large returns when applied for general farm crops.

Complete commercial fertilizers are necessary for special crops and on the poorer and more eroded soils.

Dairy Cows Can Handle More Soybeans Than Beef Steers

More soybeans may be fed to dairy cattle than to beef cattle, feeding tests conducted at Iowa State College indicate.

When 2½ to 3 pounds of beans per steer per day were fed, scouring resulted. However, when the dairy ration contained as much as one-half beans there was no scouring in dairy animals, C. Y. Cannon, head of the Dairy Husbandry Department at Iowa State College, reports.

Says Dr. Cannon: "A dairy cow can consume far greater quantities of soybeans than can steers because the cow has an outlet for the fat in her milk while with steers the fat is dammed up in the body, clogging the digestive system and causing a severe reaction."

Soybeans contain about 16 per cent fat, but the fat content of milk is little, if at all, affected by feeding high fat-content feeds. When a good legume hay is included in the dairy ration, the grain mix should not contain more than one-ninth soybeans, which preferably have been cracked. When no alfalfa or legume hay is fed, the proportion of soybeans in the grain mix should not be more than one-third.

UNADAPTED CLOVER AND ALFALFA FAIL IN TESTS

Unadapted strains of red clover and alfalfa being given an "acid test" in nine Iowa counties have fallen down miserably in comparison with adapted strains, an inspection of the plots this summer reveals.

The tests are being conducted at Denison, Leon, Farmersburg, Fairfield, Cherokee, Fort Dodge, Crescoe, Knoxville and Eldora. Most of the plantings were made in 1937, although some additional plantings have been made this spring.

In nearly every case, says W. F. Watkins, extension soil conservationist, stands of Chilean, Hungarian and Polish red clover are non-existent or poor, while stands of Ohio, Canadian and Iowa red clover range from fair to good or excellent. Likewise Argentine alfalfa, the only imported strain on test, failed to equal Cossack, Nebraska 12 or Oklahoma alfalfa, which ranked in that order.

The condition of the plots confirms findings of the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station at Ames. The AAA program requires the use of adapted seed in qualifying for payments on alfalfa and red clover seedings.

PRIMARY TEXT—When God is with you, you will be victorious. Junior Text—When God is with you, you will be victorious. Intermediate and Senior Text—Should We Do as We Please? Young People and Adults Text—The Challenge of Christian Fatherhood

The responsibilities and pressures of fatherhood need special consideration, and the lesson of today offers an excellent opportunity for consideration. Too often the of children, which is almost bly largely in the hands of the er, is entirely delegated to the father becomes the m pays the bills, occasionally out a severe act of discipline otherwise is almost a state his children.

Eli is a striking illustration man who had attained an position in life and who charged his public duties with cess, but who failed his because of weak indulgence. few Christian workers have in Eli's path.

I. A Weak Father and (3:13).

The sons of Eli were who dared even to use the of the temple for the gratification of their fleshly appetites and lusts (2:12-17, 22.) Eli protested their most flagrant sin (2:22), evidently he had lost his over them, for they did not

It is not always true the wickedness of a son is the weakness in the father, nor ways the case that weak have vile sons. Often the far better lives than their and frequently a godly and ful father suffers the heartache having a wayward son. But "like father, like son" is Boys learn from their father so much by words of advice as by deeds. Sin brings a horrible sorrow, suffering and just not only to the individual but family, and ultimately to tion. No man can ever divorce self from his relationship to ily. His people will suffer waywardness, perhaps more suffers himself. The nation is up of homes, and consequently the family suffers the nation suffer too.

There is a strange theory that social and political entities an existence apart from the who make them up, that we can drink and gamble and kill, and yet somehow we be the "land of the free and home of the brave." Houston Goudiss Discusses the Good Value of Ice Cream

Nationally Known Food Authority Describes Its Place in the Diet

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th Street, New York City.

ONE of the most significant contributions of modern nutritional science was the discovery of the importance of protective foods—milk, eggs, fresh fruits and vegetables. These foods abound in the minerals and vitamins that are so important for normal growth and health, and safeguard us against the deficiency diseases.

In this group, milk and its products made from it are a commanding position because milk is the best and most practical source of calcium and vitamins A and B.

These substances should be consumed in much greater quantities than at present if we are to increase health and efficiency and improve our chances of longevity.

The first rule in providing adequate amounts of the protective foods is to allow daily a quart of milk for every child and at least a pint for each adult. This amount of milk need not always be consumed as a beverage, however. It may be used in cooked dishes or eaten in the form of ice cream.

Composition of Ice Cream

Ice cream is often regarded as a luxury, but it deserves to be placed among our most nutritious foods. It is composed of varying portions of cream, milk, sugar, and frequently a binder or stabilizer such as gelatin. The position varies somewhat between the home-made and the commercial product, and the commercial product differs in various respects. That is because standards governing the butter fat content vary widely so that the requirement ranges from 8 to 14 per cent. Large commercial companies produce an ice cream with about 10 per cent fat.

Guard Against Contamination
Some states require the pasteurization of the milk or cream used in manufacturing ice cream; others stipulate that the entire mixture be pasteurized before freezing. These measures are desirable as ice cream requires the same scrupulous care that should be given to milk and cream.

Because of the possibilities for contamination, several precautions should be observed in buying ice cream. Choose cream manufactured by a reputable concern. Be sure to buy from a dealer who keeps it well frozen, for cream that has been melted and refrozen again may be dangerous to the opportunity for multiplication of bacteria. If it was melted. See to it that the dealer uses sanitary methods in dispensing.

ier desserts and should follow a lighter meal.

Ice cream is so rich in nourishment that it should not be consumed indiscriminately between meals, but should always be considered as part of the day's ration. When that is done, one nutritional authority states that its beneficial effects can hardly be overestimated.

Effect on Digestion

One frequently hears the question, "Doesn't the eating of ice cream retard the digestion of other foods consumed at the same time?" The answer is that it does slow up slightly the emptying time of the stomach but this delay is without significance and is more than compensated for by the important nutrients it provides.

Many people believe that it is injurious to follow ice cream with hot coffee. But it has been demonstrated that just the opposite is true. The coffee raises the temperature of the food in the stomach and thus modifies the cooling effect of the ice cream.

Another common question concerns the effect of cake or pie a la mode. Experiments indicate that eating ice cream with cake or pie produces a more satisfactory gastric juice than when either of these foods is eaten alone. One must take into consideration, however, that cake or pie a la mode is a rich combination and plan the remainder of the meal accordingly.

Use More Ice Cream

It has been estimated that five billion pounds of milk are used each year in the production of commercial ice cream, which provides about three gallons of ice cream per capita. The amounts of ice cream made at home will raise this figure somewhat. But the amount consumed may well be further increased, because when properly made from pure ingredients, ice cream deserves to rank with other dairy products among our most wholesome and nourishing foods.

By Madeline A. Chaffee

The "Briny Toyshop" was closed for the day. Its tiny show window still displayed an enticing array of delightful playthings, but the latch was hard down on the door, and its little lady proprietress had retired to her favorite low rocker by a rear window facing the sea.

The most persistent youth in the small sea-faring village rattled the door, but in vain. Miss Matilda Bell did not even hear.

There seemed more than ordinary magic in the glowing spell cast by the sun at this close of day. The old-fashioned garden sloping to the rocky shore seemed a fairy place. The sea was man-hued, dusky, wondrous, and its melody came pleasantly to Miss Matilda. There were dreams in Miss Matilda's eyes as she watched; not the happy, hopeful dreams of youth, but the deeper, sadder dreams of one who has lived long.

Miss Matilda was so much a part of her surroundings that she had ceased to notice them in detail. Her mind had flown back nearly 50 years, to the time when she had not the faintest thought of ever being a little, elderly, sweet-faced lady sitting by herself in the twilight.

To the time when she was a young, adventurous girl pledging her troth to a dashing young naval officer. Even now her eyes grew dim as the memories came drifting in on the breeze. Dream pictures blotted out the garden, the rocks, the sea itself, and Miss Matilda felt herself in the arms of her young lover, so tender, so dear—

And he had sailed away, full of hope and happy anticipations of the day when he should return to make her his wife. Miss Matilda's eyes blurred. That day had never come. There had been a fire aboard the ship—and the young officer, who belonged heart and soul to Matilda Bell, had given his life for another.

Years had taken away that first tragic grief, but Miss Matilda had loved too deeply to forget. How she wished she had been with him! Sometimes he seemed to speak to her in the voice of the sea, and she would say that she was coming—some day soon, very soon—coming to be with him. On the rocks below Miss Matilda's cottage two figures were silhouetted against the dull red sky.

"But, dear girl"—the man's voice was tender, serious—"you don't know what the life is. I do—and I wouldn't condemn any woman to it, least of all—you. It will be a torture without you—but it wouldn't be fair to take you."

The girl's straight, sweet gaze held his steadily.

"But, Tom, don't you see I want to go? It may be years before you come back. Our marriage—that-is-to-be is going to be Wise and Otherwise

"A child must have a chance to express its ideas," says a psychologist. Yes, but not on plain wallpaper!

"Girls were quicker in their movements eighty years ago," says a writer. They got a bustle on then.

"And they call America the land of free speech," said the disgruntled Scot when the telephone operator told him to put a nickel in the box.

The best husbands are those who marry young. If a man waits till he has money it hurts more to pay it out.

true partnership, Tommy boy, and it must begin by my going to South America with you now. I can face anything—with you!"

The two silhouettes suddenly converged into one as Tom said huskily:

"Bless you, sweetheart, you're coming with me. We'll play the game of life squarely—together."

And up in the little dusky window above the garden, with the sea still crooning a low love song, Miss Matilda had come into her own.

Dark Green Sudan Grass Is Dangerous As Pasture Crop

Sudan grass poisoning in cattle can be avoided by keeping the animals off such pasture until the grass has grown more than 1½ feet high or has turned a pale or yellowish green color, says A. R. Porter, Iowa State College extension dairyman.

Reports of poisoning are alarming enough to merit caution wherever sudan grass pasture is used, Porter says.

"Grass that is dark green and less than 1½ feet high is especially dangerous. It may contain sufficient quantities of prussic acid—the toxic agent responsible for the trouble—to kill cattle. The acid works quickly and only a small amount causes death if conditions are favorable."

Cattle are more susceptible to prussic acid poisoning than other farm animals. Hogs can be pastured on sudan grass with complete safety.

Every one turns up his nose at flattery—except the one who receives it.

New Fire Truck Modern Fire Fighting Equipment

NEW TRUCK AND EQUIPMENT ARRIVED HERE MON.

Equipped To Control Farm Fires As Well As Those In Town

The new completely and modernly equipped fire truck for Klemme and surrounding community arrived in Klemme Monday.

The new outfit, which is mounted on a Ford V-8 truck chassis, is built and equipped by the Verne Fire Apparatus Co. of Verne, Minnesota. The truck chassis was purchased from the Verne Auto Co. of Klemme.

The new truck is rather hard to describe, but it is one of the most dependable and modern types of fire-fighting equipment to be obtained. The truck is so equipped that it can efficiently serve council calls, where only a limited amount of water is available.

High Pressure Outfit

The truck is equipped with a gallon capacity booster pump. Water can be pumped from mains, ditches, ponds, stock tanks, or from a tank on the truck itself. The truck can be used to fight farm fires with the available water supply, as from a pond at a distance of 1,000 feet from the buildings.

Other equipment on the truck includes 700 feet of 2 1/4 inch hose, 100 feet of 1 1/2 inch booster hose, 100 feet of 1 inch booster hose connected directly to the large supply tank on the truck; one 5 gallon portable high pressure tank; 3 gallon chemical tank; 4 2 1/2 gallon chemical tanks; 20 feet of 3 inch hose (used for pumping from ditches, ponds, etc.); 36 foot extension ladder; one roof ladder; poles, axes and other tools.

Several new type hose nozzles also on the truck including 4 high pressure nozzles; a fog nozzle; a fog screen 13 feet long; 3 search lights, gas masks, chemical bombs.

Brinkman Is Chief

The truck is manned by Fire Chief "Slim" Brinkman and 12 members of the crew. The men have made a few practice runs and are getting acquainted with the new equipment.

Will Give Demonstration

The new truck will be on display on the streets of Klemme Monday night, September 10th, at which time Chief Brinkman and crew will be glad to show everybody interested the many features of the new outfit. A demonstration may be worked out for the benefit of the onlookers.

The fire siren, which is at present sounded by throwing a switch at the fire station, will be re-wired so that it can be operated directly from the telephone office. In about a week it is expected to have the change completed. Then, in case of fire, just call "Central," and the fire department will turn in the alarm and notify the fire department.

Klemme and the surrounding community can well feel proud of the new equipment which was purchased by the co-operation of the town and the fire department.

ANNUAL PICNIC HELD

BY COURTHOUSE GROUP

Garner — Courthouse officials, assistants and families held their annual picnic at Eagle Lake Park. Dorothy Hampel, deputy county clerk, was chief planner. The supervisors, Penn Eckles, George Klipping and Ben F. Greiner, furnished the dozen fried chickens and others the roasting and watermelons.

C. A. Larsen Still In Hospital

C. A. Larsen is still a patient at St. Luke's hospital at Kansas City, Mo., where he is recovering from a leg fracture. Some time ago it was found necessary to perform an operation on his leg and faster the bones with a metal plate. Sunday Mr. Larsen had another operation performed on his leg, which delayed his coming home. News from his bedside indicates he is now getting along quite well and that he will probably be able to come home next week.

Moving In Klemme

Ned Howard and family moved last week from their home here to the farm home of Elmer Howard north and east of Klemme. Mrs. Kinden, who has been living in the rooms at the rear of the Lewis Radio Shop, has moved to the new Howard house in southeast Klemme. Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lewis are having the rooms decorated at the rear of their store and will move there Sept. 1st.

Shooting Grounds

Iowa has 48 areas containing 32,000 acres posted as game producing and public shooting grounds. It has been only during the last two years that Iowa hunters ever had areas posted with signs which told them it was state hunting land maintained for their sport and recreation. Shooting within these areas is permitted during open seasons.

Quandt Makes Extensive Repairs On His Cafe Building

Conrad Quandt is having extensive repairs made on his building which houses his cafe and living quarters. Mr. Quandt has had carpenters put new sills in part of the building and is having the old siding torn off and is refinishing with gray colored asbestos shingle siding.

Mr. Quandt may also remodel the front, he states, and may put a new brick front on his cafe. However, definite plans have not yet been made.

The remodeling of Quandt's building will be a fine improvement to the business section of Klemme.

Fewer Traffic Deaths

Traffic deaths in Iowa this year are running about 50 behind the same period for last year, and it is the hope of the highway patrol that, when 1938 ends, there will be 100 fewer deaths than in 1937. Such a decrease, said Patrol Chief John Hattery, would be a remarkable record.

Des Moines, Ia., Special: One hundred years of women's fashions will be featured in a 19th century style show at this year's Iowa Territorial Centennial State Fair here, Aug. 26 through Sept. 2, according to plans completed this week. Gowns worn by the wives of Iowa governors at inaugurations, gowns of pioneer women, and of prominent Iowans of various periods of the state's history, will be included in the show. Colorado Springs Girl Is Bride Of Henry J. Smid Of Klemme

REFORMED CHURCH SCENE OF WEDDING SUNDAY AFTERNOON

Thirty-five Guests At Wedding Dinner At Mrs. Smid Home

Sunday afternoon, at 4 o'clock, August 28th, a wedding ceremony was performed by Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch, who used the single ring rites in uniting Miss Marjorie Mae Toft and Mr. Henry J. Smid in bonds of matrimony.

The contracting parties were attended at the altar by Mr. and Mrs. Howard Baack, of near Klemme.

The Bride, who was attired in a satin white gown with train and veil and carrying a shower bouquet, is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nels J. Toft of Colorado Springs, Colorado, where she resided until about a year ago. She graduated in 1936 from the Bennett, Colorado high school.

Mr. Smid is the youngest son of Mrs. Elizabeth Smid and has lived in this community all of his life. He graduated from the Klemme high school in 1933 and for the past five years has followed the painting trade, until recently when he became employed by the REA. For the past year he has been affiliated with the Allied Mutual Insurance Co. as agent.

Soon after the ceremony a dinner was served at the home of Mrs. Elizabeth Smid to some thirty-five relatives and friends. The dinner was served by Mrs. Emery Schaefer, Mrs. Albert White, Mrs. Wm. Kirkwood and Geraldine Smid. At the bride's table a wedding cake decorated in blue and white served as the centerpiece, while the room was also decorated for the occasion.

The out of town guests included Mr. and Mrs. Welta Hughson and daughter, Doris, and sons, Wayne and Clyde, Mrs. Norbert Hughson, and N. P. Toft, grandfather of the bride, all of Olweim, Iowa; and Mrs. C. P. Bishop and son, Ronald, of Colorado Springs, Colorado.

Mr. and Mrs. Smid expect to remain in Klemme for a couple of weeks after which they will move to Garner.

A reception in their honor will be held at the Garner Opera House on Friday evening.

Miss Patterson, who is 16 years old, and will be a Senior in the Klemme High School this fall, is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Patterson, east of Klemme. She has been an active club worker the past two years and attended the state convention of 4-H Clubs at Ames in the spring.

Klemme Schools Ready To Start Monday, Sept. 5

SCHOOL IN READINESS FOR LAST YEAR OF SERVICE

Supt. Galbreth Outlines Rental Costs For Books For Various Grades

School opens Monday, September 5, in Klemme when students will come to get their books and attend classes for short periods in the morning. The schoolhouse has been thoroughly cleaned and put in shape by Janitor Clifford Montgomery, and everything is ready to go.

The completed school faculty is now as follows:

W. H. Galbreth, Klemme, Supt.; A. L. Kingery, Klemme, principal and coach; Marvin Batchelder, Marion, science and music; Margaret Brakel, Mason City, commercial; Ruby Greiner, Hairsburg, home economics and English; Irma Merritt, New Hampton, seventh and eighth grades; Marion Irvine, Dysart, fifth and sixth grades; Ruth Potter, Nashua, third and fourth grades; Estelle Hansen, Waterloo, first and second grades.

The textbooks will be handled almost one hundred per cent on the rental plan this year, thereby eliminating the trouble of disposing of old books. Inasmuch as there will be no books given out before Monday morning, we are publishing below the approximate cost of renting the books for the different grades. This price includes the cost of most of the supplementary workbook material for the first semester and for that reason might seem a little higher than last year. It should be kept in mind, too, that some new courses have been added in the different grades in the last couple of years.

First grade, $1.65.
Second grade, $1.85.
Third grade, $2.25.
Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh and Eighth grades, $2.50.

High school will also be $2.50 with typing tuition $3.37 a semester extra.

There will be some cases where the charge will not be as high as mentioned here and possibly a very few cases where supplementary materials will bring the charge a little higher before the end of the semester, but we have tried to make an estimate to guide the parents on the first day.

Students who have geography books that they own should bring them to the schoolhouse Saturday to see about disposing of them. There will also be a need for the economic geography books used by the class of 1938 when they were juniors. These should be in not later than Saturday, too.

Severely Burned On Hand By Hot Tar While Repairing Telephone Cables

Carl Anderson, manager of the local telephone company, received severe burns on his left hand and wrist about noon Friday when he was finishing the task of repairing a telephone cable near the Wilson Drug Store.

Mr. Anderson was about to enclose a cable splicing when the melted tar overturned on his hand. Mr. Anderson stated that this was the first accident he has had while working here the past seven years. Not a bad record considering the hazards sometimes involved in his work.

House Un-Americanism Body Probes Hollywood Communism

By Joseph W. La Bine

A. F. OF L'S JOHN FREY, INVESTIGATOR DIES
They were obliged to discuss John Lewis.

Domestic

Last year Chicago Times Reporter John Metcalfe joined Fritz Kuhn's German-American Bund, traveled 20,000 miles attending Bund meetings, then resigned to write a startling expose for his paper. Direct result was a $25,000 house committee on un-American activities, which met last week under Texas' Martin Dies. After three days of probing, un-Americanism reared its colorful head everywhere from C. I. O. headquarters to glamorous Hollywood.

Ex-Bundsmen Metcalfe told how Fritz Kuhn organized 500,000 German-Americans under instructions from Adolf Hitler, how in return Kuhn was given a whip hand over Germany's ambassador to the U. S. He told of Chicago's "Silver Shirts," organized to smash Communism.

Ex-Bundsmen Peter Gissibl told how Nazi spies consorted with German-Americans, how the Red Star line "fixed it" so spies could slip back home when they got in trouble. But it was American Federation of Labor's John P. Frey who tossed in the biggest bombshell and caused C. I. O.'s John L. Lewis to snort with rage.

"Nazism is one thing, but Metal Tradesman Frey promised to identify 'several national C. I. O. officers' as Communists. Would he mention John Lewis? 'How could I avoid it!' replied Mr. Frey.

The Frey disclosures had barely started before Committee Investigator Edward Sullivan hurried into Washington from California, anxious to reveal how C. I. O.'s Harry Bridges, America's most famous alien, "attended 'top fraction' meetings of the Communist party and received aid from officials of the U. S. labor department while patriotic citizens were trying to have him deported for his Communistic activities."

Continued Investigator Sullivan: "Witnesses can be produced who can name the day when an official of the immigration service contacted Harry Bridges and called him to his office, where he read . . . a confidential letter of instructions on his future behavior, written by an outstanding official of the labor department."

That Communist Bridges is financed by Hollywood cinema stars was Mr. Sullivan's next charge. Armed with this evidence, supported by Unionist Frey whose accusations John Lewis seemed unwilling to answer, the Dies committee prepared to remain in Washington two more weeks. In New York they will pick up more tasty rumors, then move west across the nation to smell out Communism a la Hollywood.

Foreign

Many years ago Germany's great Bismarck fooled his opponents by telling the truth, knowing they would not believe. Last week, when Adolf Hitler called 500,000 reserves to the colors for war games with a million regular soldiers, all Europe became jittery. But in Berlin there was scoffing; if Germany planned anything but peaceful moves, she would have assembled her giant war machine secretly. Remembering Bismarck, answering to that secret mobilization on such a giant scale would be impossible, Berlin's nervous diplomatic corps sped the news back home to Paris, London and Prague. There, these things happened:

(1) In Prague, England's Lord Runciman has spent a fortnight mediating differences between loyal Czechs and their disgruntled fellow-countrymen, Sudeten Germans. Sudetens want autonomy, eventual annexation by Germany. It was possible that Germany's mobilization foreshadowed a quick annexation move? As Premier Milan Hodza rejected a Sudeten demand for autonomy, all Czechoslovakia became worried and Lord Runciman wished he were back home.

(2) In Paris, where the government has also been having trouble with Mussolini, French frontiers along Germany and Italy were virtually locked. Next, Interior Minister Albert Sarraut re-enforced his counter-spying service against Germany.

(3) In London, Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain forgot his catarrh and returned from Scotland. Since Germany recently closed its fortified zones to all military men, Britain's war office warned its officers to get special certificates to avoid "trouble" during travels in Germany.

Chief dynamite in Germany's maneuvers lay in the possibility of an incident that would topple Europe's delicately balanced peace structure.

When Japan and Russia signed a truce in their month-old undeclared war on the Manchukuan-Siberian border, only the most optimistic observer could predict lasting peace. As a redemarcation commission prepared last week to settle the boundary dispute, two incidents threatened once more to send Russia's bear charging up bullet-pocked Changkufeng hill. On isolated Saghalien island, half Russian, half Jap, Soviet guards fired on a touring member of the Japanese parliament. Next day Tokyo's troops took advantage of the truce, advanced 100 meters up Changkufeng hill while Russian guns bristled. Since wisdom was the better part of valor, the Japs immediately retreated.

Politics

Dearest than anything else to Franklin Roosevelt is his legislative program, blocked last session not by a Republican minority but by anti-New Deal Democrats. No silent sufferer, Mr. Roosevelt decided long ago that congress needed new blood to replace opponents of his reorganization bill, wage-hour bill and lesser measures. This year's primaries offered an opportunity.

By last week his "purge" program was not a success. But neither had New Dealism suffered many losses in elections thus far. Bound to break the impasse, Mr. Roosevelt decided to stake his political future on his tremendous personal popularity in the South. Fortnight ago at Barnesville, Ga., he bluntly read out of the party Sen. Walter F. George, who sat scowling in the audience (see picture). Last week 60-year-old Senator George took up the "challenge" and set out to beat New Dealer Lawrence Camp in Georgia's primary, September 14.

GEORGIA'S GEORGE
He had reason to scowl.

Stalking next into South Carolina, the President intimated that Senator Ellison D. ("Cotton Ed") Smith would be unwelcome at Washington next winter, intimating also that South Carolinians should send in his place Gov. Olin D. Johnson.

Back in Washington, news of the South's "purge" gave political commentators enough hard tack to chew on until election day. What Franklin Roosevelt wanted was complete domination of congress, insuring passage of his legislative program. Thus would he be able to dictate his 1940 successor, dispelling the third term bugaboo.

People

Last month Anne Lindsay Clark married Son John Roosevelt, who a fortnight ago took an $18-a-week job in the Boston department store of late Democrat Edward Filene. Last week Anne Roosevelt's sister, Sally, who has sung her way to nominal fame in a night club, said she would marry George Xavier McLanahan of New York.

Wed only two weeks to his telephone operator sweetheart from Gore Bay, Ont., 21-year-old Auto Heir Daniel C. Dodge was honeymooning on Manitoulin island off Lake Huron's Georgian bay. One afternoon as he rummaged around the garage with his wife and Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Bryant, a stick of dynamite exploded. Completely shattered was Dodge's left arm, his face torn, his eyes blinded. Rushed off by boat to a distant hospital by his badly injured friends, Dodge suffered excruciating agony. Finally he stood up, swayed, jumped into the water, drowned. Next day Bryant was not expected to live.

Crime

One morning last fall, 18-year-old Paul Dwyer of South Paris, Me., was arrested in North Arlington, N. J. Stuffed in the trunk of his automobile was the corpse of James G. Littlefield, elderly country doctor. Stuffed in the back seat was that of Dr. Littlefield's wife. Paul Dwyer went to prison under life sentence for double murder. Then he changed his story. Said Dwyer:

Francis Carroll, a former deputy sheriff, had improper relations with his daughter, Barbara, Dwyer's sweetheart. When Dr. Littlefield learned of this, Carroll killed him. Later he killed the doctor's wife. Fear of Carroll caused Dwyer to admit both murders.

Last week these horrible accusations were settled. Francis Carroll was convicted, sent to prison for life. It appeared likely that sallow-faced Paul Dwyer would be pardoned, though he might still be charged with guilty knowledge of the slayings. Meanwhile Barbara Carroll received offers to appear in a Boston night club.

Aviation

Transatlantic commercial air supremacy has long since been willed by public consent to U. S. and Great Britain, though until last year neither nation did anything to justify the public's approval. A few weeks ago Nazi Germany sent its Nordwind, Nordstern and Nordmeer catapulting from the Azores to New York and back, placing a new nation in the race for Atlantic air supremacy. Last week Adolf Hitler's birdmen did something still better.

Non-stop from Berlin to New York in 24 hours, 56 minutes, came the 26-passenger Brandenburg. Two days later Brandenburg was again in Berlin, making her return trip in the record time of 19 hours, 55 minutes. No longer a secret is Hitler's ambition to make not London, not Paris, but Berlin the European starting point for transatlantic flights.

Down from the clouds east of Mexico City plummeted an airliner. First a crash, then flames, and 11 were dead. Down from fog-bound skies into Germany's Black forest came a Czechoslovak liner bound from Prague to Paris. Sixteen died. Down to their deaths off England's coast went six crew members of a royal air force flying boat, bringing to 126 the total fatalities in that service this year. Thus, in 12 hours, in Mexico, England and Germany, 33 lives were snuffed out.

Sports

When Broker J. Smith Ferebee played 144 holes of golf in Chicago last fortnight, it looked like a new marathon fad would start, rivaling marathon dancing, surpassing the toughest flagpole sitter. Last week at St. John, Ind., 23-year-old Charles Grant started playing golf at dawn. By 3 p. m. he had covered 162 holes, by sundown, 225. His worst 18-hole round: the tenth, scoring 81.

Miscellany

From San Francisco's Golden Gate exposition grounds last week came orders that publicity on the 1939 fair must show more fair buildings, fewer fair maidens. Result was a new bit of publicity, something fair officials had not expected. Up and down in front of the administration building paraded "the most beautiful picket line in America." Their placards: "We're out on a limb." "We want a leg-acy."

Last fortnight Britain's proud Queen Mary made a westward Atlantic passage in 3 days, 21 hours, 48 minutes, clipping better than an hour from the record of her rival, France's Normandie. Last week Queen Mary steamed east from New York, made the crossing in 3 days, 20 hours, 42 minutes, to beat another Normandie record. Said a proud officer: "This is the lion's turn to roar."

Last June 1 a big malamute dog went hunting with his master off Alaska's frozen Bering strait. Lingered off shore to gobble seal meat, the beast was carried to sea on an ice floe. Last week, more than two months later, the master again went hunting, this time with Father Bernard R. Hubbard, Alaskan missionary on lonely Point Hope, 250 miles away, the dog bounded up. He had cruised the entire distance on a cake of ice, had thrived on seal meat.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

NEW YORK.—When Sir Walter Runciman was here in 1937, it was reported that he was trying to persuade Washington to lend money to Germany, to Runciman Master of Squeeze Play soothe Hitler and make him stop frightening England. That may or may not have been his mission, but, as a master of the old credit-and-raw-materials squeeze play, he works that way, and, now, as Viscount Runciman, he is deep in the Downing Street strategy which swings these two cudgels of empire. Prime Minister Chamberlain appointed him as mediator in the Czechoslovak-Sudeten German negotiations, but the Czechs toned that down to adviser.

Viscount Runciman has been a silent ally of Viscount Halifax in the quiet, glacial-pressure advance of the four-power bloc scheme for a European coalition and the final and complete isolation of Russia.

It was reported from London, unverified so far as this writer knows, that it was he who Makes Moves In World's Chess Game put over a fast credit double-play with France and Italy, the moment the Daladier government came in, and he has been tagged as the man who deploys the empire's financial resources in the diplomatic chess game.

His father was a ruddy old sea dog who sang chanteys, a cabin boy who became a shipping czar and a baronet. Viscount Runciman is a pallid, tight-lipped little man, a total abstainer, a former Sunday School teacher, and a faithful chapel-goer.

As president of the British board of trade, he made concessions in empire free trade, but he is a protectionist of the Chamberlain tradition. Like many men of small stature, he has the Napoleonic psychosis, writing books about Napoleon and hoarding memorabilia.

THIS writer has heard from several assured but not necessarily authoritative sources that Tullio Serafin would succeed Edward Johnson as manager of the Metropolitan Opera.

Serafin To Boss The Met? Signor Serafin has been highly esteemed here for his musicianship, but all was not well between him and the Metropolitan management when he returned to Rome in 1935, after a number of years as Italian conductor here.

"The Metropolitan has not kept pace with the artistic progress of the modern stage," he said, on his arrival in Rome. "The way opera is put on at the Metropolitan is ridiculous . . . The great fault with the Metropolitan is the little encouragement it is giving to its latent talent."

The Metropolitan reply hinted that Signor Serafin was really thinking about money rather than art. In the season '32-'33, he had a fair subsistence wage of $58,200 for the season. This had been worked down to $34,000 the year he left.

He did indicate that he thought that was pretty shabby pay for an ace conductor, but insisted his criticism was directed solely at artistic shortcomings.

Several years ago, the Metropolitan was intent on national self-sufficiency in music.

Home Talent For Opera No Bargain It was going to discover and nurture native talent. That hasn't quite come off, and there have been the usual number of importations. It will be interesting if it brings in not only a European manager, but one who is its sharpest critic.

Among music lovers of this writer's acquaintance, there seems to be great indifference about where the singers come from as long as they are good. They insist that music, above all, must be free from the sharply nationalistic trends of the day.

As a lad, Tullio Serafin laid down a shepherd's crook for a baton. Tending the sheep near Cavarzere on the Venetian mainland, he used to walk several miles to town on Saturday night, at the age of ten, to conduct the village band. He attended the conservatory at Milan and was a full-fledged conductor in his early youth.

At La Scala, in Milan, he was assistant conductor under Gatti-Casazza. He became one of the most widely known and popular conductors in Europe.

A staunch supporter of the Fascist regime from its outset, he has been conductor of the Royal Opera at Rome since his departure from New York. He was replaced here by Ettore Panizza.

Star Dust

- ★ Movie Lure
- ★ March Comeback
- ★ Bing's Song

By Virginia Vale

PERHAPS you, the public, hadn't realized it, but you have been staying away from the movies in such stupendous numbers that the motion picture industry is about to spend $1,000,000 to lure you back into the theaters again.

Producers, distributors and theater men will put up the money. And you will get $250,000 of it, my friends. There will be a contest. At present, although the rules have not yet been decided on, it seems likely that this contest will be in the form of a questionnaire based on pictures released between now and October 31.

Booklets containing rules will be issued only at theater box-offices. Each contestant will have to answer 30 questions about 30 different pictures in order to qualify.

Half of that $1,000,000 will be spent on advertising in newspapers and magazines.

Fredric March is going to try, try again—and if he fails this time, no doubt he'll keep on trying—to make a come-back on the stage. Last year he and his wife, Florence Eldridge, backed a play that was produced in New York, you'll recall, and it failed—not because of their performances, but just because it wasn't an awfully good play.

FREDRIC MARCH

If they can find a play that they like, they'll do it again, come autumn. In the meantime, he's storing up more of what it takes to produce plays by working in Hal Roach's "There Goes My Heart," and in another picture when that one is finished.

It looks as if Myron Selznick had started something that may result in our having better pictures. He has formed a partnership with various prominent actors, writers and directors—as the best theatrical agent in Hollywood he knew all of them—to make pictures, with a share of the pictures' profits taking the place of salary. Ernst Lubitsch Productions, Inc., is the first of these producing units.

Under this arrangement, a picture will have to be good—or else!

The Stroud twins traveled a long and winding road, so far as their career was concerned, before they reached those Sunday evening broadcasts where they share honors with Charlie McCarthy. They began as acrobats with a circus; ran away from home to do it. Then they went into vaudeville, and switched to dancing. They toured this country, then Australia, New Zealand and the South Seas before returning to Broadway, and switched their act again, this time to the sort of thing you hear them doing on the air.

Here's something new under the sun. Practically all of the big publishers of popular music want a certain song, and can't have it. The song is "Hail KMH," the theme-song introduction to those dialogues between Bing Crosby and Ken Carpenter. It was written especially for the broadcasts, and that's that, even if it has become such a hit that the song publishers are itching to get it into general circulation.

ODDS AND ENDS—Their friends are still hoping that Joan Crawford and Franchot Tone may patch up their marriage; at present, though not likely, it seems possible . . . At least, Joan says she doesn't plan a divorce, ever . . . Ben Bernie and Kay Kyser have been invited to lecture before the New York University Radio Workshop . . . Walt Disney has bought 55 acres of land near Hollywood and will build a $1,000,000 studio there—thanks to Mickey Mouse, Snow White and others . . . Al Jolson and Edward G. Robinson will be back on the air September 20—meanwhile Al is indulging his passion for seeing fast horses run fast . . . Eddie Cantor's next picture will be "Mr. Average Man."

Round Trip Sea Flight in 43 Hours 45 Minutes

A four-motored German monoplane Brandenburg which successfully completed a round trip flight between Berlin and New York city, covered the flight from Berlin to New York in 24 hours and 45 minutes and two days later made the homeward flight from New York to Berlin in 19 hours and 55 minutes. Capt. Alfred Henke, who piloted the plane, wears a big smile over his remarkable achievement. The east to west crossing was the first time in history such a flight had been accomplished. The flyers clipped 5 hours and 50 minutes off the only previous non-stop west to east crossing to Berlin. The Wiley Post made the previous record on the first leg of his world flight in 1933. Airmen hailed the flight as one of the achievements of aviation because of its clock-like precision.

President Roosevelt dons the cap and gown with help from Dr. W. O. Hooper of the University of Georgia. The President received an LL. From Athens, Ga., he came by special train to Barnesville to participate in a celebration commemorating a rural electrification project. It was at this meeting that he urged the defeat of Sen. Walter F. George and the nomination of Huey P. Long, who is opposing George.

Inflamed Lumps In the Neck

By DR. JAMES W. BARTON
© Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.

WE HAVE all seen children with a lump in the neck—an enlarged lymphatic gland. The gland is really a filter which takes out poisons from the lymph and then allows the poison to go back into the blood stream in small amounts so that the system can absorb it gradually.

Thus in infected tonsils it is not unusual for these swollen glands to hold some of the poison within their tissues for as long as two years after the tonsils have been removed.

Now a swollen gland can be a source of gradual poisoning of the system, particularly if the youngster is run down, has infection in teeth, tonsils, sinuses or has tuberculosis. It is often of help to him physically therefore to have the gland come down to its normal size again.

Removal May Be Wise.

If the gland is broken down it is usually removed by surgery, but naturally the physician or surgeon does not like removing any lymph glands because "every gland that is needlessly removed weakens by just so much the ability of the system to protect itself against all infections. However, it is a serious mistake to allow enlarged glands to cause such inflammation of the surrounding tissues as to make it necessary to remove parts of muscles, with the possibility during operation of injuring important nerves and blood vessels."

When the gland is actively inflamed—adenitis—causing pain or distress, the X-ray is now being used.

Flat Feet.

An elderly man consulted his physician about a pain in inner side of his right knee. Examination showed a flat foot which allowed the lower leg (below knee) to swing inward thus putting strain on inner side of knee. A plaster cast was taken of the foot, a support made, and the pain in the knee disappeared.

Flat feet are common and if not brought up by exercise or supports or both, it may mean other symptoms besides painful feet. The knee joint and all the joints in the spine between bones are put under a strain when the arch of the foot falls.

The first thought in the majority of cases of flat foot is to try to strengthen the muscles which hold up the arch of the foot, making the foot look like a claw.

Two simple exercises done twice daily to a count of 20 each are:

1. Trying to grasp a marble or other object with the toes.
2. Raising the body slowly from heel to toe, holding a few seconds, and then coming down slowly.

A third exercise is to walk around the room three times on the outer sides of the feet. Results can often be obtained in six weeks to six months.

Putting the feet in hot water for five minutes before exercise and for five minutes after exercise will prevent or remove soreness caused by the exercise. When the individual is elderly, greatly overweight, or unwilling to take exercise, arch supports, properly fitted, act as a crutch and give much relief.

Root-Growth Factor Is Found by Acid Testing

A clew to the mystery of what takes place in a plant to make it form roots when certain chemicals are applied has been found in simple experiments by Dr. William C. Cooper of the United States department of agriculture. Compounds containing indolic acid when applied to stems or leaves cause a rapid growth of functioning roots. Dr. Cooper has discovered that the active substance is a factor within the plant.

He used lemon plant cuttings in three groups. The first he planted in their normal state. The second had the stem ends painted with indole-acetic acid, and they produced far more roots than the normal group. The third group he treated with the root-forming substance but did not plant immediately. Instead, he cut off the treated portion and applied indole-acetic acid to the stem end. He then planted the cuttings, but got no better root-forming results than from the untreated group.

The explanation, Dr. Cooper said, is that the indole-acetic acid attracts to the part of the plant to which it is applied a substance in the plant which causes root formation. In the third group this substance was attracted to the stem end, and when he cut off these ends there was little of the substance left to respond to the second application of the acid. It takes about 40 hours to draw to the end of the stem all of the root-forming substance.

BOOKS IN BRIEF

No One Knows Fate of This Brave Lover

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES

"THE LADY OR THE TIGER," by Frank R. Stockton, is a story of olden days, when a semi-barbaric king in a far land held absolute power over his subjects. This monarch had devised a system of justice that pleased him mightily. Instead of all the bother of trials that the modern world struggles under, he had an arena where all trials took place.

The defendant was put into the arena facing two doors. At a signal he opened one of the doors. Each door led into a chamber, heavily padded with skins and furs so that no sound issued forth. Behind one door was a ferocious tiger; behind the other was a beautiful maiden. If the defendant opened the door with the tiger, justice declared him guilty and his punishment was instant. There was no delaying of justice. If he opened the door with the lady, he was innocent and his reward was immediate. He was married to the fair lady instantly, for the king had a minister and chorus all ready for the wedding ceremony. If the defendant already had a wife and family, that made no difference in the proceedings, for the king was too fond of this method of justice to change it for individual cases.

Elizabeth James

AN EDITOR-AUTHOR

Frank R. Stockton was attracted by stories of adventure. Pirates appeared in some of his longer stories, and the action of "The Lady or the Tiger" speaks for itself.

He was born in Philadelphia in 1834. His writing career included work as editor and original writer. As assistant editor he worked on the staffs of St. Nicholas Magazine, the Century, and Hearth and Home. His own writings were designed to amuse the public, not to espouse any cause; nor was he influenced by sectional traits in style. He died in 1902.

Stockton was famous in his day as a humorist, this spirit first being evidenced in "The Ting-a-Ling Stories" which showed his nimble, elf-like fancies. Never did he exceed the natural humor of "Rudder Range," a collection of short sketches on rural life first published in Scribner's Monthly. He was a keen observer of the feminine temperament, deriving humor from this source.

Of course, the populace loved this method of trial. They always went to court in the utmost excitement, because they never knew whether they were to witness fierce death or overwhelming happiness.

Lover Brought to "Trial."

Now this king had a daughter who was the apple of her father's eye. But the princess had an eye for the youths of the court. One of them was especially handsome, and the princess and this commoner had a love affair. All went along well until the king heard of it. Then the youth was brought to trial, to determine whether he was guilty or not in daring to love a princess of royal blood.

The day came. The tiers of seats were filled to the top row of the arena. The whole city knew of the royal love affair and every one had come to see the trial.

Presently the door opened into the arena and the youth walked into the vast circle. All the spectators sighed, for he was indeed a handsome young man and worthy of a princess's affection. He looked quickly toward the royal box, caught the eye of the princess and knew in the flash of an eye that she knew which door led to the tiger and which to the lady. He waited for some sign.

With an impatient gesture, imperceptible except to the eyes of her lover, the princess brushed her right hand toward the right.

What Happened?

With no faltering, the youth walked toward the right door and opened it. The decision of the princess was given to her lover swiftly and with no indecision.

But it had not been reached so easily. Night after night she had awakened hearing the sounds of his shrieks when the tiger hurled himself through the air upon his victim. But night after night she had been agonized with jealousy and despair when she thought of her lover wed to another woman. Anger and rage would descend to tear her very soul. So the princess had endured great agony of mind to reach her decision. Frank Stockton, author of this story, finishes his narrative thus: "The question of her decision is one not to be lightly considered, and it is not for me to presume to set up myself as the one person able to answer it. So I leave it with all of you: Which came out of the opened door—the lady or the tiger?"

And he leaves the reader in this suspended excitement!

Braided Rug Design From New England

By Ruth Wyeth Spears

SO MANY readers have expressed interest in rag rugs that I know many of you will want to copy this one. I discovered it in a village on Buzzards Bay where, a century ago, whaling ships put out to sea. In the book offered below there is a knitted rag rug found one time on a trip through Ohio. I have not yet done a special book on rag rugs. It does seem that there should be a way to exchange designs from different parts of the country.

The center medallion of the rug shown here is its outstanding feature. The braiding is fine and tight. The braided strips should be sewn together with strong linen thread or about size 8 cotton thread used double. The center round should be 8-inches long as shown. Sew around and around until the center oval is 14-inches long, then make the eight loops shown in the next round—three along each side of the oval and one at each end.

These loops should be 2-inches long. In working around the loops with the next rows, the trick is to "ease" the inside edge of the braided strip in just enough to keep the work perfectly flat, and to give the scalloped effect shown. As you work around, the scallops gradually straighten out and the rug becomes more oval in shape.

NOTE: Every Homemaker should have a copy of Mrs. Spears' book SEWING, for the Home Decorator. Forty-eight pages of directions for making slipcovers and curtains; dressing tables, lampshades and many other useful articles for the home. Price 25 cents postpaid. Ask for Book 1, and address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

Ink Spots And Spatters
By Jergie

Here's another one of those wild tales which has been going the rounds of the press and which I got on the second or third bounce. The story deals with a southern gentleman who had stored 12 bottles of liquor in the basement, but his wife demanded that he pour the joy-water down the sink. Here's the rest of the story:
"I proceeded with the unpleasant task of complying with my wife's request. I withdrew the cork from the first bottle and poured the contents down the sink with the exception of one glass, which I drank.

"I extracted the cork from the second bottle and did likewise with the exception of one glass, which I drank. I then withdrew the cork from the third bottle, emptying the good old booze down the sink save for one drink which I drank. I pulled the bottle from the cork of the next one, drank one sink out of it, and poured the rest down the glass.

"Pulled the sink from the next glass and poured the cork down the bottle. I pulled the next cork out of my throat, poured the sink down the glass, bottled the drink and drank the pour. When I had emptied everything I steadied the house with one hand and counted the bottles and corks and glasses with the other, which were 29. To make sure, I counted again when they came by and I had 74, and as the house came by I counted again and finally I had all the houses and bottles and corks and glasses counted except one bottle, which I drank."

I got another "rise" out of my quest for information on Wood Lake, supposed to be in Hancock County. Earl Hall in his "Observing Eye" column in the Mason City Globe Gazette also comes to the rescue. . . but Earl got in his usual dirty crack along with the information. Here's his story:

"I am always glad when I can tell" R. A. "Jergie" Jorgenson of the Klemme Times. And I find myself in that position at this time—thanks to Dr. F. J. Colby of the state conservation commission.

Recently Jergie looked at a map, or maybe it was a list, and saw a "Wood Lake" credited to Hancock county. He has spent somewhere between 40 and 85 years in Hancock county and he's never heard of Wood Lake. "Anybody know where it is?" he inquired editorially.

The answer:
Wood Lake is about 3 1/2 miles northeast of Britt. It lies about 80 rods to the southwest of Eagle Lake and covers about 60 acres.

Maybe it would be better to speak in the past tense here. It did cover about 60 acres before it was drained. Now the area is owned by a Mr. Rasmussen and is being converted to farm use.

And this service comes free, Jergie."

I-S-A-S
I pass along the following article which appeared in the last issue of "The Iowa State Safety Council," and which contains the pledge that we should all observe:

GO ON RECORD WITH YOURSELF

"You don't want to die in a horrible accident. . . you don't want to be scarred, crippled or blinded for life—you don't want these tragedies to happen to anyone near and dear to you. Nor do you want to kill or injure somebody else—some mother, father or little child.

"Why not go on record with yourself? Study the resolution below. It may help you to be more careful.

"AND BECAUSE haste is responsible for most automobile accidents, I resolve to keep the following rules in mind:

- I will not take chances at street intersections, curves and railway crossings.
- I will not pass a red light.
- I will not cut corners.
- I will not speed through play streets and congested areas.
- I will not drive after taking a drink.
- I will not drive when tired or sleepy.
- I will not "hog the road."
- I will not pass the car ahead on a curve or near the crest of a hill.
- I will not cut in front of another car when a third car is approaching.

I RESOLVE FURTHER THAT:
I will take my time.
I will keep to the right.
I will give a clear signal when passing a car or pulling away from the curb.
I will give full consideration to pedestrians.
I will protect myself and my family from the recklessness of others.
I will be alert at all times.
I will practice care, courtesy and common-sense.
AND AS A PEDESTRIAN:
I will cross only at intersections.
I will cross only on the green light, and then cautiously.
I will look in both directions before stepping from the curb."

Lesson for September 4

SAMUEL: SPIRITUAL REVIVAL

LESSON TEXT—1 Samuel 7:3-13.
GOLDEN TEXT—Prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and serve him only. Samuel 7:3.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When Samuel Was a Boy.
JUNIOR TOPIC—When Samuel Grew to Manhood.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Putting God First.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Price Spiritual Revival?

"Revivals are costly. The spiritual awakening which our country so much needs must begin with a spiritual deepening which the church so much needs. There is a price to be paid . . . Strange as it may seem, the price must be put away, gods of world pleasure, worldly ambition, love of ease and self-gratification. It is the unwillingness to pay the price which keeps us from the richness and power of the full spiritual life" (Philo L. M. Lowell).

Israel had come to the place where the people recognized that they were on the brink of national disaster. They knew they had come to the end of the trail, and were ready to do something about it.

I. Return Unto the Lord (v. 3).
Samuel appears in his first public ministry to call on his people to return to the Lord. Back of the public act is the history of a godly life and devoted service to the Lord and to His nation. Such a man can consistently urge others to turn to God.

The response of the people was wholehearted. They were thoroughly sick of their sin and separation from the favor of God. The earnestness of their sincerity was their obedience to the admonition of Samuel that they turn from idolatry.

II. Put Away False Gods (v. 3, 4).
Israel had learned from their heathen neighbors to worship false gods. These they must put away if God was to be able to bless them. The same prerequisite to spiritual revival exists today. As some may say, we do not worship heathen gods. Perhaps not, but yet one is astonished at the close similarity between the ritual and worship of some secret cults and orders and the ancient religions of heathendom.

The fact is that we have set up many new gods—money, fashion, social position, and what not. The command needs to go out again through God's messengers, "Put away the foreign gods."

III. Gather Together and Pray (vv. 5, 6).

Spiritual life thrives on the gathering together of God's people. The crisis in Israel was met by a great convocation of the people. We need to revive the great soul-stirring religious gatherings of a generation ago.

"I will pray," said Samuel. He was a great intercessor. (See 1 Sam. 15:11; Ps. 99:6; Jer. 15:1.) Revival never comes without a history of faithful intercession on the part of those whose hearts are really burdened. Ask yourself, How much have I really prayed for a revival in my church, my community, and my nation? If I should begin to pray in earnest, would God hear me and answer?

IV. God Will Save Us (v. 8).
"Behold, the Lord's hand is shortened that it cannot save, neither his ear heavy that it cannot hear" (Isa. 59:1). "Thus saith the Lord . . . have I no power to deliver?" (Isa. 50:1, 2). God saved Israel and delivered them out of the hands of their enemies. The Philistines, seeing them gathered together to pray, assumed that they were preparing to fight and attacked. In the previous battle at that very spot (1 Sam. 4:1-10) Israel had fought with the weapons of men and been disgracefully defeated. Now they fought with the weapons of prayer and faith in God, and great was the victory.

America is valiantly battling against the social and economic problems of these distressing days, but one fears that all too often the weapons are those of the arm of flesh which will fail us. Let us look up instead of to one another. "God will save us" (v. 8).

V. Ebenezer (v. 12).

Our forefathers, familiar with the truth of Scripture, used biblical words in naming their children. The present generation all too often know the names simply as the strange signatures on old letters. The word "Ebenezer" might well merit a bit of a revival itself. Here Israel had met a disastrous defeat. They were broken by it and had become an almost hopeless people. Now God had given them victory in the very same spot and they raised a stone of remembrance to God's help. The word "Ebenezer" means "stone of help," but also carries with it the meaning of Samuel's word, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us" (v. 12).

There is an inspiring word of hope here for every troubled soul. You may, like Israel, have fallen into defeat. Your life may be discouraged. You may be utterly discouraged. Turn to the Lord, put away your sin, gather with God's people, pray, and God will give you victory, even to the very point of former defeat.

to Knitting a Chic Fall Sweater

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

It's time to knit! Or do you happen to be a crocheter instead of a knitter? Either way you do it, time to make one of the most charming sweaters ever pictured.

We'll wager that at sight of these ultra chic and fast-fashioning sweater fashions, your fingers will begin to twitch, your heart action taken as a sudden urge to get you to clickety-click those knitting needles faster than they can be clicked before. Or if, by chance, it's a crochet that you wield, we've an idea it's going to go at rap-pace to complete a "darling" sweater like the crocheted model shown above to the left in the illustration, for of course you'll be wanting to have it ready to wear with the new fall suit. The two sweaters in the picture are knitted.

They agree with you, this trio of hand-made sweaters certainly have the chic and charm about them that goes beyond the ordinary. Not only is there anything complicated about the knitting and crocheting of them, for each of the models is very simple to make.

"Sweaters this year," comes word from Paris, "will be new because of their departure from the conventional." Short, just over the hips, is the foreword that reaches us in regard to the new fall sweaters. Many are slide fastened for everything is being zippered up the new fashions that can be zipped. The majority of new sweaters have low necks.

The band-and-bow trim that gives the dainty feminine detail to the sweater pictured above to the right is definitely new. It gives a grand opportunity to carry out a two-color scheme which is something to take note of, considering that bicolored treatments are very important in the current fashioning program. The three bands of contrasting color are fastened with bows made of tufts of fringe and of the identical mercerized crochet cotton used to make the sweater. You'll love this band-and-bow trimming the more you wear your sweater.

The jacket-like sweater blouse above to the left has that air of sophisticated simplicity about it that every woman versed in the art of smart costuming covets. It is knit of knit-croch-sheen in an open-work stitch interspersed with solid blocks that gives a sort of plaided effect. This sweater is the type that looks just as well when you remove your jacket as it does with the jacket on. Make it up in one of the lovely new muted colors and you will find it an indispensable and flattering accessory. The square neck line is a high-style feature. So also are the crochet buttons up the front. Most fashion reports have much to say in regard to the flair for buttons running to larger rather than small this season.

With word emanating from Paris that "it's a year for sweaters in versatile styles," cardigans get headline attention. Variety in cardigan styles is the new mandate, but it must be "variety without fussiness." A cardigan type that embodies all of Paris sweater dictates is the short-sleeved one shown below. It is knit and crocheted of lustrous mercerized cotton. Work it up in a contrast of your two favorite colors.

SUMMER ERMINE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

the way of a summer evening the short fur, feather or bolero ranks at the top of the list, making an agreeable change from the fashionable cape. One pictured is in natural summer ermine, worn over a crepe frock with accordion skirt. The smart young men who go to parties and such wear these boleros. The bolero is very important for fall, recast as a smart daytime item.

Shed-Up Coiffures Now

Go With Doll-Sized Hats It seems as if the idea of shed-up hair is gaining, whether like it or not. At any rate, reports returning from midsummer report that they will show the tiny doll-sized hats launched by Caprelli worn atop higher hair that brings curls up off the face. It remains to be seen how the fashion will "take." You can tell, fickle fashion, fickle we are apt to go to any extreme.

PART FABRIC, PART KNIT NEW FORMULA

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

College girl, here's your cue to smartness in dress this fall. Which is to the effect that the sweater and the cloth skirt in accurate color match is a fashion "must" this coming season. So there's lots of fun ahead matching a sweater knit of shetland, cashmere or angora wool to the skirt of patterned tweed, or if you prefer, a monotone wool of plain or novelty weave. Your choice runs from rich dark autumn tones to the now-so-fashionable pastel colors.

Then there are those amazing three-piece ensembles that employ the identical yarn employed in knitting the sweater, as is used for weaving the cloth for jacket and skirt. There's no-end chic in the costumes of cloth that have short fur jackets with sleeves and borderings, knit of yarn in colors that tune to the scheme of things.

Cerise Added to Popular Pinks by Paris Stylist

Cerise is a new step on the ladder of pinks. A pleasant variation of the more purplish fuchsia shade, the cerise is used by Lelong for a flowing sash tying around a deep blue evening gown with a halter neck.

And the same vivid shade is the background for a dainty white-dotted Swiss, which forms the bodice for a bouffant white tulle skirt. The bodice is draped up and over the right shoulder but comes under the left arm, thus leaving the left shoulder strapless, while the right is well covered.

Adding Bright Touch

Flowers on the bodice of an evening frock matched by flowers in the hair supply all the decoration that one could want for festive occasions.

Moldy Colors

Moldy colors are being proudly displayed at the moment as being high style.

GIVE FLOCKS BEST HOT WEATHER CARE

Ample Range, Shade, Green Feed Are Important.

By C. F. Parrish, Extension Poultryman, North Carolina State College, WNU Service.

Poultry authorities agree that adequate range, shade, and green feed are three essentials for well-managed flocks during the hot summer months.

When growers are ready to market their birds, those who have been careful to observe these essentials will find they have been well paid for their efforts.

Where home-mixed rations for pullets are used, the following growing mash is recommended: 35 pounds No. 2 yellow corn meal, 20 pounds standard wheat middlings, 20 pounds No. 2 heavy oats finely pulverized, 12 pounds standard wheat bran, 4 pounds fish meal (55 per cent protein), 2 pounds meat meal (55 per cent protein), 2 pounds dried skim milk, 2 pounds ground limestone or oyster shell, 2 pounds bone meal, and one pound iodized table salt.

Farmers having an adequate supply of milk may omit the dried milk recommended in the above ration. Because it is a valuable food, milk should be given to poultry in some form.

However, when fed as a liquid, it should be placed in clean, easily accessible containers. Surplus milk should not be allowed to remain in the containers since it attracts flies.

Plenty of water should be available at all times. If possible, it should be kept in a shady place.

Along with the mash, birds should have all the grain they will eat each morning.

'Blind Staggers' Among Summer Horse Ailments

Hot weather is the time when the horse disease encephalomyelitis, sometimes called "blind staggers," "brain fever," or "sleeping sickness" is most likely to appear, says Dr. R. A. Craig, head of Purdue's veterinary department. The disease affects the nervous system of horses and mules. In recent years, especially during the summer months, it has caused serious losses in the West, Middle West, and several states along the Atlantic coast, but may strike anywhere.

It is an infectious disease and the symptoms generally occur in three phases. The first stage may escape notice as it usually is only a mild indisposition commonly accompanied with a rise in temperature. The second stage is characterized by distinct nervous symptoms which may or may not be accompanied with fever. In the last stage the horse may go down and be unable to rise, sometimes thrashing violently with the legs and head. Death usually follows when these symptoms develop.

Encephalomyelitis may be easily confused with other diseases, Doctor Craig points out. The symptoms are similar to other ailments of the central nervous system, and a veterinarian should be called at the first indication of sickness. Although the chances for cure are greatest in the early stages of the disease, there is no remedy effective in all cases.

About Raising Turkeys

Turkey-raising is not difficult when properly handled, but there are some principles which should be observed. Turkeys should be allowed to remain in the open as much as possible, and never hatched by hens, says the Montreal Herald. Breeding stock and young stock should be kept away from barnyard hens, so as to keep them free from disease. If there is any disease in breeding turkeys hatch the eggs in an incubator, and rear the pouls in brooders.

Feeding the Pigs

If you feed your pigs too many peanuts or soybeans, you haul soft pork to market and are penalized two cents a pound, says the Country Home Magazine. Packers know there is not much bacon left after soft pork is fried. But a peanut-fed hog can be finished off with corn. The soybean-fed hog can be saved from disgrace if the oil is first extracted from the beans. The beans should be fed as meal along with a regular balanced ration. Then there is less loss between the packing house and the dinner table, and less fat in the skillet.

Storing Eggs

Chopping dollars off the yearly food bill isn't so very hard, if you know the short-cuts, says the New York State College of Home Economics. For instance, a large part of the money spent yearly for eggs can be saved, if quantities of eggs are bought when prices are lower, and stored in waterglass for later use. Absolutely fresh eggs stored this way keep their flavor, whip well, and can be satisfactorily cooked in almost every way.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Explains the Causes of Food Allergy

Well-Known Food Authority Names the Foods That Cause Trouble

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

6 East 39th St., New York City.

A NEW phrase has crept into daily usage in recent years, and has in fact become so common that comedians use it in jest and draw laughs from their audiences when they mimic, "I'm allergic!" But the words have deep significance for perhaps 30 to 60 per cent of the population who have cause to agree with the old saying that "one man's meat is another man's poison."

They are victims of the curious phenomenon known as food allergy and have an abnormal reaction to the proteins in certain foods and other substances. As a result, foods which are beneficial in themselves and which usually have an important place in a normal balanced diet, cause a variety of unpleasant effects.

These may range from hives or a skin rash to a gastric disturbance with spells of nausea. The individual may suffer from migraine headache or an attack of hay fever or asthma; or he may have a tendency to what appears to be bronchial or head colds. It has been determined that these symptoms in an individual who is allergic are due to intolerance of certain proteins.

Even when the offending foods are fruits and vegetables, it is the protein that is responsible. It has been suggested that the sensitization results because at some previous time, an unsplit or undigested protein in some way passed through the membranes lining the digestive tract and entered the blood stream. This acted very much like a foreign substance and sensitized body cells in some way so that whenever the same food is eaten, the disturbing symptoms occur as a sort of defense mechanism.

Heredity a Factor

A tendency to allergy seems to be inherited. But the substances which caused a disturbance differ with each individual, and the type of reaction also differs. For example, a mother may be allergic to milk; her child inheriting the tendency may be allergic to fish. Drinking milk may give the mother an attack of asthma; eating fish may cause the child to break out with hives.

Trouble-Making Foods

It is difficult to generalize regarding the foods that cause trouble, because they vary so widely among individuals who are sensitized, and often one person is sensitized to a number of foods. It has been found that the foods most frequently causing allergic symptoms include wheat, milk, eggs, chocolate, pork, fish and shellfish, tomatoes, cauliflower, cabbage, strawberries and oranges.

Skin rashes are believed to be caused most frequently by hypersensitiveness to milk, cereal or pork. Hives are reported to occur often from eating strawberries, chocolate, fish and tomatoes. Wheat is frequently an offender in migraine headaches. Asthma seems to be common in persons who are sensitive to milk, eggs and butter.

Other Offending Substances

Foods are not always responsible for allergy, and the symptoms may be produced by contact with wool, feathers, dust, pollen, dander from horses or other animals; or even the sting of a bee.

Discovering the Offenders

The ideal procedure for the allergic victim is to find out the offending foods or substances and avoid them. For early recognition of a tendency to allergy may prevent discomfort and trouble.

There are two ways to discover the trouble makers. One is to learn by experience, either by keeping a record of the foods eaten and noting the appearance of symptoms, or by eliminating from the diet, first one and then another of the foods that are suspected of causing difficulty. The other is to let your doctor conduct simple skin tests. Small scratches are made on the arms and legs, and each scratch touched with a solution made of the protein of a food or substance known to cause trouble. If a person is allergic to that substance, the skin around the scratch swells and becomes inflamed. The inflammation disappears after a few hours and causes no pain or inconvenience.

Other Foods Must Be Used

Once the offending food or foods are determined, they should be eliminated either for all time or until the individual becomes desensitized. If the trouble maker is an uncommon food, such as lobster or clams, the allergy presents no great problem, but when children react to necessary foods such as milk, eggs and wheat, the homemaker faces a difficult task. When milk is the offending food, it must be avoided, not only as a beverage, but in bread, cakes and puddings. Sometimes dried or evaporated milk, goat's milk or soy bean milk may be used instead. When wheat is the trouble maker, the alternatives include cornstarch, rice flour, potato or rye flour; rice and corn cereals; tapioca or barley. When hen's eggs are injurious, duck's eggs

SEND FOR THIS FREE CHART of FOODS THAT OFTEN CAUSE TROUBLE

C. Houston Goudiss will gladly send you, FREE, a chart showing which foods have been found most frequently to cause allergic reactions, and also those which are the least likely to cause trouble. Just state your request on a postcard and address it to C. HOUSTON GOUDISS, 6 East 39th Street, New York City.

can sometimes be used with success, or meat or fish may be substituted.

Sometimes after a period of exclusion, an immunity is built up so that later the foods may be reintroduced gradually into the diet.

Don't Jump to Conclusions

It must be borne in mind that many of the symptoms produced by food sensitivity may also result from other causes. For this reason, it is unwise to decide that one is allergic without due investigation. Nor must the imagination or the current widespread discussion of the subject be allowed to cause adults or children to mask their unwillingness to eat certain foods with the false notion that they are unduly sensitive.

On the other hand, homemakers should be sympathetic with both children and adults who say with good cause, "I can't eat that!" And it would appear that there may even be some compensation in this unpleasant situation. For a group of scientists who have studied the subject announced a few years ago that those who belong to the allergy group appear to have a definite capacity for becoming intellectually superior. Thus, the child who suffers from a skin rash or stuffy nose today, due to food sensitivity, is apt to be full of energy when he reaches manhood and exhibit unusual ability for cultural leadership.

Questions Answered

Mrs. A. M. T.—The notion that onions or lettuce contain opium or some other narcotic drug is wholly without foundation. They are two of our finest vegetables.

R. F. B.—Vitamins A, C and D are required for healthy teeth. Calcium, in adequate amounts, is also essential.

Mrs. A. F. J.—The caloric value of fresh or canned mushrooms is very slight, as their carbohydrate is in a form that cannot be readily assimilated. They are useful, however, for adding flavor and appetite appeal to many dishes.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Prunes in Bread.—Pitted prunes cut in small pieces and added to the last kneading of bread, instead of raisins, makes a delicious bread.

Substitute for Cream.—If, when making coffee, you run short of cream, a good substitute is to beat up an egg and put a little in each cup with a little milk. You will find this greatly improves the coffee.

Save the Tablecloth.—A piece of waxed paper under a child's plate at the table is scarcely noticeable, yet saves the tablecloth in case of accidents. Though one may not have children, this is good to remember when the young visitors come.

REVOLUTION

on Main Street

Give a thought to Main Street as you scan today's headlines! All the world's excitement isn't in Europe.

For, in our town and towns like ours clear across the country, there's a daily revolution going on. Changes in dress styles and food prices... the rise of a hat crown... the fall of furniture prices—these matters vitally affect our daily living... and the news is ably, fully covered in advertisements.

Here, in concise, meaty form, makers of the world's goods tell you what's new, what's good... and how to make your dollars S-T-R-E-T-C-H. Smart people who like to be up-to-the-minute in living and current events, follow advertisements as closely as headlines. They know what's doing in Europe and America... but they also know where money buys most!

If a man commits one crime it is his fault—if it becomes a habit society is to blame

--Low Pressure--

I suppose I am one of the poorest salesmen in the world. I don't like to urge people to buy. Sure—I like to show people the nice new furniture and the latest rugs, and I like to talk about the bad points as well as the good points, but high-pressure selling is "nix" in my store.

However, I do have a big, well sorted stock to pick from, and if you have looked at other stores you know that my prices are the lowest in the land.

So, in spite of being a poor salesman, my store enjoys a good trade, and what pleases me most is that the same people come again and again to trade at my store.

FARM BOY ESCAPES SERIOUS ACCIDENT IN RUNAWAY SATURDAY

Milvern Barz Run Over By Wagon, Receives Only Bruises

Milvern Barz was shaking hands with himself and knocking on wood Saturday forenoon after he narrowly escaped what might have proved a very serious if not fatal injury.

Milvern was helping fill a silo at the Leslie Hartbeck farm and was one of the bundle haulers. Milvern's team became frightened as he was loading his rack. The team started to run and bumped into the back of another bundle rack. Milvern jumped on his wagon in an effort to halt the team, and as he did so, the team swerved to one side, tipping the rack and pitching Milvern off the rack and under the wheels. One or two of the wheels ran over the upper part of his right leg. He was taken to a local doctor who examined him but found no broken bones, but a badly bruised leg muscle, a wrenched back and a skinned arm.

THINGS NOT TO FORGET

A hunter has many things to remember Too many, in fact, to hear him tell it. There is one thing he does not forget and that is his gun. Guns have been forgotten and left behind, or at least most hunters consider forgetting a gun as some kind of an omen. One thing which should not be forgotten and which is, more than any other item, is the license. This should be a bad omen for all hunters. Some hunters could not forget their license if they wanted to, because they don't have one. These hunters are those who should forget their guns and consider it a good omen.

There are many things which a hunter should not forget and they are as important as the gun or license. A hunter should never forget to ask the landholder for permission to hunt on his land. He should not forget to use the gate from one field to the next and, above all, not forget to close the gate. He must not forget to be careful about the farmer's livestock when shooting, for the farmer doesn't like "runaways" in a cornfield and a cow is worth more on the hoof than on the ground. A hunter should not forget to be a gentleman at all times and this means returning to the farmer's house to thank him for the privileges extended and to offer him, if nothing more, a share of the game taken.

Then there are many laws which the hunter must not forget. But these are easy if the hunter will not forget two things. First, some laws are made for the safety of the hunter and the others to save some game for his children. The laws prohibit carrying a loaded or assembled gun in a motor vehicle. They also prohibit shooting a rifle across highways or water. Such laws are for the protection and safety of hunters and others. The laws also provide that a hunter may take only so many birds or animals in one day. These bag limits are fixed that a days hunt will provide plenty of food for a man's family. To take more is to waste and to deprive those who come after us of the sport of hunting.

So a hunter has many things to remember but most important is not to forget.

I-S-A-S

The editor of the "Advertiser" of Republic, Kansas, has a brand new way of announcing the birth of a baby boy, whose father is in the garage business. Everytime I hear of a garageman being the father of a bouncing baby boy I think of the following story as printed by the Kansas editor. Here 'tis:

"The Furse Production Co., Republic, Kan., announce the New Model 1938 'Baby Boy.'—Model No. 1.—Irene Furse—designer and chief engineer; Ron Furse—production manager; Dr. C. A. Noble—technical adviser; Mrs. Maude Ocobock—technical assistant. Released April 19, 1938. Two lung power, free squeeling, double ball bearing, economical feed, streamline body, water-cooled exhaust, changeable seat covers, weight 7 pounds and 12 ounces.

"The management assures the public there will be no new models during the balance of the year."

I-S-A-S

Perhaps you failed to notice that warning printed in The Times last week by the town dads, to the effect that speeding and reckless driving in Klemme must cease. Klemme streets need gravel and other work done and you can contribute to the funds by exceeding the 20 mile per hour limit. The taxpayers thank you in advance for your "contribution."

I-S-A-S

Sure, my neck is just as sore as your's from sticking my head out to see what the new teachers look like. Not bad! Not bad!

I-S-A-S

My "enemies" on the Civic Club seem to want this scribe to suffer further tortures, for they have invited Earl Hall of the Mason City Globe-Gazette to be the speaker at the banquet next week Thursday evening. I presume Earl is up to his ears digging around in the dirt of the past to unearth another one of his yarns with this scribe as the "hero." I warn you Earl, you'll suffer if you do!

I-S-A-S

Seems kinda nice to hear the old school bell ring again. It's great to have the town full of peppy youngsters again after three months of vacation. But the kids would just as soon have still more vacation.

I-S-A-S

The fire boys are as tickled as a kid with a new tin wagon. But why shouldn't they be proud of that shining new red fire truck? Not many towns the size of Klemme have an outfit like that. The men are making practice runs in the evening to get acquainted with the many gadgets on the new truck.

One way to save money is to be so busy earning it that you don't have time to spend it.

Adaptability Led to Use of Gold and Silver Coins

The selection of gold and silver for the principal monetary purposes was due to their adaptability, says the Indianapolis News. In addition to their being desirable, they possessed the following qualities demonstrated to be requisite to a just and equitable medium of value: Relative scarcity, portability (containing large values in a small bulk), durability, homogeneity (or uniformity), divisibility (capable of being divided into small parts and again united without appreciable loss).

The use of the metals as money by weight proved a cumbersome process, and a coming device was introduced, probably by the Greeks about 900 B. C. The bank check came into use as a means of saving the transfer of coined money. The bank note is an evolution of these preceding forms, being a promise of the bank to pay the specified amount on demand. The Bank of Sweden is credited with having first issued this form of money in 1658.

The scarcity of gold and silver, the need of bills of exchange and of a money more convenient to carry, and the issuance of government credits forced on bankrupt nations brought about the use of paper money in European countries. Colonial America early adopted this medium of exchange from the English.

Paper money in America first was issued by Massachusetts in 1690. The object was not to supply any supposed lack of a medium for trade, but to satisfy the demands of some clamorous soldiers. The first issue of money under authority of the Continental congress was dated May 10, 1775, but not placed in circulation until the following August.

Pipes Reveal Character, Notes London Authority

The briar pipe has nothing to do with briars as we know them, but is a corruption of the word "bruyere," a kind of giant white heather which grows on the island of Corsica, writes a correspondent in London Answers Magazine.

Curiously enough, the briar owes its popularity to Napoleon, who detested smoking. After his death, tourists visited his birthplace on the island. One of them lost his meerschau pipe and borrowed a rough briar from a peasant. He found it smoked so pleasantly that he took a number of briars back to France with him, where they soon became popular.

In the Far North the Eskimos make pipes from walrus ivory, which they carve beautifully with little figures. In the East the Chinaman uses a hollow bamboo stem, while the Australian aborigines actually make a pipe from an emu's leg.

Almost every nation has its own peculiar pipes, and they are worth studying, for they throw some curious sidelights on national characteristics.

Queen of Ancient Roads

The Appian way, built in 312 B. C. was the queen of all ancient roads, notes a writer in the Los Angeles Times, and early was threaded daily with traffic for all the known eastern world. Its sides were flanked with the tombs of the Scipios, Claudius, Milo, Livia, Seneca and other illustrious Romans. Scipio Africanus in 201 B. C. entered Rome by this road, Cicero was welcomed here with honors on his return from exile in B. C. 57, the Apostle Paul entered Rome over its pavements and Titus after he had destroyed Jerusalem was received with triumph along the Via Appia. This road was 350 miles long, marked with the earliest milestones. From it we come to the Baths of Caracalla, and soon pass over the ground where the Catcombs burrow below, till we reach the old Church of San Sebastian built by Constantine in 313 A. D., and then to the Belvedere, where is obtained a wonderful view over the Roman Campagna and of the Claudian aqueducts which still supply Rome with water.

Political Red Herrings

A red herring is a herring that has a red color through being cured by smoking. The Oxford dictionary has a quotation dated 1686, concerning the employment of a red herring in fox hunting: "The trailing or dragging of a dead cat or fox (and in case of necessity a red herring) three or four miles and then laying the dogs on the scent." Just as a dog's scent may be led astray by drawing a red herring across the track, so the public may be misled in a political campaign by bringing in a false issue intended to divert attention from important questions.

Captain Kidd Parson's Son

One of the most celebrated pirates of all time was the son of a Scotch minister, according to the Standard American Encyclopedia. He was William Kidd. Kidd took to sea and established himself in New York City as a landowner and shipper. Commissioned by William III in 1697 to suppress pirating, he met with mutiny and misfortune on his way to Madagascar and turned pirate himself, to prey on commercial ships. He was tried, found guilty and hanged in London in 1701.

Enduring Blue

It is believed by scientists that the blue seen on mummy cases, having lost nothing of its brightness, must be either ultra-marine or cobalt. Modern analyses have shown that blue on ancient pottery, both Egyptian and Chinese, was sometimes derived from cobalt.

KNOW YOUR DUCKS

Under the Federal regulations governing the taking of ducks during the 1938 season, four species which have had complete protection for several years may be killed in limited numbers.

The four species are Canvasbacks, Redheads, Buffleheads and Ruddy Ducks. The 1938 laws provide that not more than three of any one or three in the aggregate of all four species may be taken in any one day by any one person and included in the daily bag limit of ten ducks. The possession limit is fixed for twenty for all ducks, of which number not more than six of any one or in the aggregate may be of the four species named above.

The Woodduck on which the season has been closed for several years continues to have complete protection under the 1938 regulations and it is unlawful to kill them or have them in possession.

Federal regulations for the taking of migratory game birds prohibit baiting, use of live geese or duck decoys and shot gus larger than ten gauge. The use of artificial decoys is permitted and no limit is placed on the number which may be used. Live decoys are unlawful regardless of the distance between the hunter and the live decoys, and cannot be used directly or indirectly. The three shell limit on repeating shot guns is also effective the 1938 season, as it has been for the last three years.

FAMOUS POEMS

Lanier's Poem Tells Revenge Of Irate Slave

By ELIZABETH C. JAMES
"THE REVENGE OF HAMISH" as told by Sidney Lanier has opened one morning long years ago in feudal Scotland. The old servant Hamish was ordered by his lord the proud McLean, to go up the hillside and head off the deer so that they would run by his lordship's shooting stand.

But the old servant Hamish was weak, for he had not yet had breakfast, so early in the morning the hunting horn awakened him. No longer had he the strength of youth, yet he ran as hard as he could. But the deer were too quick for him, they bounded away and were out of sight over the hill. Fearfully Hamish waited; it was an hour before he had courage enough to go and tell his lord that he had let the quarry escape.

Anger flashed in the eyes of the proud McLean. "Come, henchmen. Ten strokes on the back of this vassal to teach him to obey my commands. And no stroke count unless it draws blood."

When this was done the bold McLean and his men rode away to another game. Still he lay, the servant Hamish. Then like a flash

LANIER'S STRUGGLE

As poet and musician, as lecturer and lawyer, as teacher and civil service employee, Sidney Lanier struggled to support his family and to write at the same time. His imprisonment during the Civil war left him with diseased lungs, so that like Poe, he died in his fortieth year.

Born in Macon, Ga., in 1859, the poet grew up in an atmosphere of learning and refinement. He was graduated from Oglethorpe college, where his position as a teacher was interrupted by the war.

Adversity seemed determined to prevent his writing. Once he wrote to his father that it seemed right for him to devote himself to poetry, having followed it so long with so much humility. But a migration to various climates, loss of property, and a family in need were always to be considered first. Lanier died in 1892.

jumped to his feet, seized the dog from its mother's arms, and ran toward the crag that overhung the sea. For a moment Lady McLean could say no word, then she shrieked for love of her child. The men heard and reined in their horses. She pointed toward Hamish now almost to the top of the hillside overhanging the sea.

"A castle to the man who stole him!" she cried.

Hamish Takes Revenge.
But they were too late. He reached the crag with the child in his arms. Then Hamish called down to them, "Let the master bare back and take ten blows with the lash. And no stroke will count does not draw blood."

The proud McLean slowly bent his knees. The henchmen feared a strike until Hamish called "Agoo!" The blows fell. Hamish raised the child as if he would bring him to his mother, then with a voice of hate he screamed, "Revenge!" holding the child aloft, he jumped over the crag into the rocky sea. The proud McLean lay on the edge of the crag looking down into the waters, while his wife lay beside him.

This poem by Sidney Lanier is a condensed drama of a few days of old when lord held life and death over his vassal. In direct contrast to this poem is the next selection.

To those who have seen the Chatahoochee river as it begins its journey in the Blue Ridge mountains north Georgia, these words from "The Song of the Chattahoochee" bring a vivid picture.

Poetry Animated.
"Out of the hills of Habersham down the valleys of Hall, I am down to water the plain, run rapid and leap the fall, split the rock and together again, accept bed or narrow or wide, with from folly on every side, lover's pain to attain the plain, from the hills of Habersham, from the valleys of Hall."

Even written as prose for paraphrasing, the words leap along the waters of a foaming mountain stream, eager with life. To Lanier all the forces of nature were in the elation of the presence of God, the river flowed along many miles to stop it, but it was the duty of Duty which Lanier heard.

"I am fain for to water the plain, the dry fields burn, and the mills are to turn, and a myriad flowers mortally yearn, and the lordly main from beyond the hills calls o'er the hills of Habersham, calls through the valleys of Hall."

Fur-Embellished Costume Important Thing for Fall

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

DEPEND upon it—this is going to prove one of those seasons when the highest ambition lady of fashion will be to come the happy possession of a lavishly and intriguingly fur-trimmed costume suit. Which is as much to be for if there is one more important than another broadcasting via dramatic styles throughout leading style makers it is that of the fur-embellished costume for the coming fall winter.

Call your attention to the some fur-laden outfits in the fall. This trio of voguish costumes were displayed at a series of revues held recently by the Chicago Style Creators. The Chicago district for the education of buyers who came from all parts of the country to gain first-hand news of fashion futures. The illustrated in the foreground to light is highly significant as it makes the continued importance of the fur. Also it emphasizes the tendency to do exciting in the way of novel fur manipulation. Persian lamb in tall slenderness follows the many gores of the skirt. Wide bands of the fur also define the hemline and up and down the front.

Stylish tuxedo-front theme in the new sleeve idea are seen out in terms of fur in the same jacket suit to the left. The jacket is vertically banded in fur, a fur which is very fashionable this season when brown pelts of every type are the rage. The importance of the jacket-with-every-costume theme was definitely stressed throughout the entire program presented by the Chicago Style Creators. There is this to observe in regard to the newer jackets, they are inclined to drop the bolero trend in favor of boxy hiplengths and many take on the very new dolman sleeve which proclaims them of last-minute styling. The chubby jacket that you see here is typical of the new trend. The material for the ensemble is a green ribbed woolen. The frock beneath features the very new sailor yoke. A gold belt adds the climactic touch.

Citing general fashion indications stressed in preview showings, we find that skirts for day wear are short, fifteen inches from the floor being the accepted length. Soft bloused effects top the slim, straight and short skirts.

In fabric treatments quilted designs and appliques are widely in use. Softness from draping, shirring, tiny tucks and smocking is very evident. The 1900 influence is seen in dinner and evening fashions. Fabrics are often the Louis XIV type, most luxurious for formal wear, including brocades, lames, metallized taffetas, velvets and moires.

Gay Feathers Chic Note on New Hats

If it is a sports felt the newest decoration is a bright quill so tall as to seem impossible at first glance. You see them on the new suede tall-crown fedoras and quaker hats with their imposing high crowns.

When it comes to the dressier hat fashions, watch feathers! They will play a big part in the season's trimming program, especially colorful little ostrich tips. The very new Louis XIV tricorne have wee tips surmounting.

Many uses of dainty ribbons are made in a prettily feminine manner. The new millinery creations may well be called "confections" with their daintily frivolous bows and flowers and feathers, embroideries and such.

Later on, for winter social activities, these wee millinery concoctions will take on a dressy mood in that they will be cunningly adorned with ostrich tips, ribbons and such.

You can get cunning models in felt for early wear with your fall tailored suit. You will be enchanted with these miniature types, we assure you.

Elasticized Fabrics Vogue

A noteworthy trend in play clothes is the vogue for elasticized fabrics. Wool and cotton swim suits are elasticized to insure a smooth fit. Some casual sports frocks are designed with elasticized waistlines. Elasticized panty-girdles often are worn under tennis frocks.

Collars Found Smaller

Collars are noticeably smaller on fur coats this year, with tailored models often seen on mink, dyed ermine and Japanese weasel coats. A few swaggers are seen with almost no collars, while the tuxedo front panel is very popular for fall daytime models.

The 'Tinkling' Dress

The duchess of Windsor recently wore a "tinkling" dress to one of the smart Paris night clubs. The sound is produced by paillettes topped with bits of loose metal which let out a refined-jingle when they are in motion.

Lesson for September 11

SAUL: MORAL FAILURE

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel 10:21-25; 13:20-23; 31:3-6.
GOLDEN TEXT—To obey is better than sacrifice. I Samuel 15:22.

Moral failure is the direct result of disobedience to God. This follows from the fact that the moral order established in the universe was established by God. He, then, is the One who knows the right way. "God is always right, and when we are against God, we are always wrong. To walk a road leading away from God is to travel straight to ruin, and this is what Saul did" (Wilbur M. Smith).

The story of Saul's choice as king, his personal qualifications for leadership and his ultimate disgrace and death, is one that should give pause to every young man or woman who has been afflicted with present-day ideas that brilliance of mind, quickness of wit, and apparent worldly success, apart from obedient submission to God, are satisfactory ends in themselves. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Prov. 16:25).

I. "There Is None Like Him" (10:21-25).

Saul was chosen of God to be Israel's first king. God Himself had been their king, but they in their willful unbelief wanted to be like neighboring nations. And the choice of both God and the people fell on Saul, for there was "none like him among all the people."

Never has a man been privileged to enter more auspiciously upon high office. Physically he was well-equipped, head and shoulders above the people (10:23). Mentally he was fitted for leadership. He was humble (9:21). He was spiritually right (10:6-9). He had a tolerant and kindly spirit (11:13). He was a successful military leader (ch. 11).

For two years all went well, but then came the crisis which proved that all was not as it should be, when Saul presumptuously took the place of Samuel as priest and made an offering (13:9-13). This was later followed by his disobedience in sparing Agag.

II. "To Obey Is Better Than Sacrifice" (15:20-23).

God had commanded that there must be utter destruction of the Amalekites and their possessions—something like the burning of a disease-infested house—a wiping out of a king and people who were condemned of God. We may not fully understand this act of God, but if we know Him we will not doubt that it was in accordance with His infinite wisdom and love.

Saul chose to disobey, later contending that it was done because of the people, that sheep and oxen had been spared for a sacrifice to the Lord. Samuel cuts through his hypocrisy and declares that God wants obedience rather than sacrifice. This is a lesson that many who profess to follow the Lord have not learned.

"All the sacrifices and ceremonies of religion are to aid and promote obedience, not to be a substitute for it. Disobedience can never be made a virtue, even though attended by thousands of sacrifices" (Stanley). The church or the individual who denies or disregards the teaching of God's Word and attempts to make up for it by sacrifices and ceremonies declares to the world that there has been a departure from true faith in God. Obedience is a virtue all too rare.

III. "The Battle Went Sore Against Saul" (31:3-6).

This quotation from verse 3 relates to a particular battle, but it may well be applied to the entire battle of Saul's life. Having once begun the downward path of presumption and disobedience, the descent became rapid.

The man to whom God had given a new heart and upon whom He had poured out His Spirit fell to such a low state that we find him in I Samuel 28 consulting a witch, a spiritistic medium, seeking opportunity to speak with Samuel, who had already gone to his reward.

Spiritism is an evil current in our day, and therefore it may be well to point out that while mediums do seem to have the power to simulate the dead, they bring this about through familiar spirits (I Sam. 28:7), that is through communication with evil spirits. The dead do not actually return, but they are represented by demonic agents. When the witch of Endor called on her familiar spirit, God intervened and actually brought Samuel from the dead to the great surprise of the witch. No Christian should ever have anything to do with Spiritism. If he does he indicates that his spiritual life is at very low ebb and that he is in real soul-danger.

The death of Saul writes a tragic end to a promising life, destroyed not so much by outside influences as by the moral decay within. The wise man said that as a man "thinketh in his heart so is he" (Prov. 23:7). It may not show today or tomorrow, but eventually the heart that is wrong leads to a life that is wrong. "Keep thy heart with all diligence: for out of it are the issues of life" (Prov. 4:23).

HOW to SEW By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

IF SMOCKING seems to be time consuming, here is a short cut that saves hours. The first step is to shirr the material by machine. Loosen the tension slightly and stitch in straight rows; then pull up the bobbin thread to gather the material.

You will note in the sketch that some of the simple hand stitches are made over two rows of gathers and the others over a single row. Much of the beauty of smocking depends upon the spacing of the rows. The double rows of gathers in the sketch, No. 2 and 4, are ¼-inch apart. The space between these and the single rows should be about ¾-inch.

Another important point is the choice of colors and an interesting variety of stitches. In the arrangement shown here, rows 1, 3 and 5 are made in the darkest color by back-stitching over the gathers as in row 5 and then working loop-stitches through the back-stitches as in row 1. Row 2 is a version of plain feather stitching, and row 4 is done in the Cretan stitch. Variations of all of these stitches and dozens of others that will be new to you and your friends are fully illustrated in Book 2 offered herewith.

Are you ready for birthdays; and the next church bazaar? Do you turn time into money with things to sell? Mrs. Spears' Sewing Book 2 has helped thousands of women. It is full of new ideas for things you can make in your spare time. If your home is your hobby you will also want Book 1—Sewing for the Home Decorator. Order by number enclosing 25 cents for each book. If you order both books, a leaflet on crazypatch quilts with 36 authentic stitches will be included free. Address Mrs. Spears, 210 S. Desplaines St., Chicago, Ill.

How Women in Their 40's Can Attract Men

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 35 to 42), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of nerve, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells.
Get more fresh air, 8 hrs. sleep and if you need a good general system tonic take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made especially for women. It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vivacity to enjoy life and assist calming jittery nerves and disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life. TURN CHEAP ROUGHAGES INTO BUTTERFAT, IS SUGGESTION OF I.S.C. DAIRYMAN

Keeping more dairy cattle may be the best method of using up the excess roughage on many Iowa farms, suggests Dr. C. Y. Cannon, head of dairy husbandry at Iowa State College.

Butterfat is cheap, but farmers generally cannot afford to allow good feed to rot, Dr. Cannon says. He suggests that if farmers have too much sudan grass or sweet clover, it may be wise to make these into silage which will release some corn for the production of grain.

At the Iowa State College Dairy Farm, silage has been made of some of these roughages. It is essential to get such roughage as sudan and sweet clover cut very fine, Cannon says.

Figures have not been released on creamery butter manufacture in Iowa for 1937, but for the preceding 2 years—1935 and 1936—there was a heavy decline from the production in 1934 and from the average production for the period, 1929-33.

Although butterfat is low in price, feed prices also are relatively low, and if roughage is going to waste that otherwise might be turned into income through production of butterfat, then producing more butterfat may be desirable, Dr. Cannon observes.

The farm mortgage debt in the United States was the lowest in 1937 that it has been in the last 17 years, reports W. I. Myers, governor of the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Schmidt and Luther, accompanied by LaVohn, Eunice and Junior Larsen, drove to Kansas City and spent Sunday visiting with C. A. Larsen at St. Luke's hospital. Mrs. Larsen has been with her husband since he suffered a broken leg several weeks ago.

Paul Grange, Alvin Keeper and Orville Stokesbary returned Tuesday morning from a few days fishing trip near Park Rapids, Minnesota. Fishing was not so good, but they caught enough to have several good feeds. The men fished on several lakes but had only fair luck.

Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Grosshuesch of Freemont, Wisconsin, parents of Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch, and Dr. Paul Grosshuesch, president of the Mission House College at Plymouth, Wisconsin, and brother of Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch, came Tuesday for a visit. Mr. Jost was met at Elgin, Ill., by Harold, and from that point on they made the journey together to Toledo. Mr. Jost expects to take in some major league baseball games at Cleveland and Chicago, and will return to Klemme about September 14th.

ARE AMERICAN WOMEN SMART-OR JUST LUCKY?

LUCKY was grandmother if she owned a cook-stove that was a "good baker"—even though it was a gutton for fuel—and had to be cleaned with "blackening."

SMART is the woman of today. She owns a modern Hotpoint Electric Range. It's a grand baker—can be cleaned with a cloth—and costs far less to operate.

Modern women know that improvements in home appliances happen so rapidly today that yesterday's experience is out of date. Hotpoint Electric Ranges are an excellent example. The amazing new Select-A-Speed Calrod cooking unit heats faster than ever. The size of electric service bills for cooking on an electric range is less than half what the average non-user thinks.

Find out how inexpensive Electric range users' service bills actually are. Come in today.

Records of 12 to 20 acres a day picked and husked are by no means unusual with Oliver's new 2-Row Corn Picker-Husker. The amount of work done, of course, varies according to condition of land, crop and power. Under favorable operating conditions, owners report as high as 25 acres covered.

Back of every Oliver Corn Picker-Husker is 10 years of sound engineering experience, 10 years of actual field experience, and 10 years of unceasing research for better ways of picking and husking corn. The final result of this work is a century of work is the new OLIVER CORN MASTER—a 2-Row Picker-Husker for modern farmers!

Come in and see for yourself, the many quality features built into this new machine. Be the judge yourself—but don't buy any picker until you have seen the CORN MASTER.

Thada Will Assemble Traps In New Building

THADA CONSTRUCTING BUILDING FOR MOUSE TRAP FACTORY HERE

Walt Thada is having a frame building, 20 x 40 feet in size, constructed on the lot north of the Henry Lewis produce store.

The new building will be divided into a storage and packing room, a trap assembly room and office quarters. The latter two rooms will be insulated and well lighted.

Mr Thada at present is having the metal stamping work done at Webster City, but the entire assembling, inspecting and packing of traps will be done in the new quarters.

The trap, known as the Runway Mouse Trap is proving a popular item and Mr Thada has orders for several thousand traps ahead all the time.

This new enterprise is a valuable asset to the business section of Klemme and has all the possibilities of developing into a large industry.

THADA WILL DISPLAY MOUSE TRAP AT WATERLOO DAIRY CATTLE CONGRESS

Walt Thada was at Webster City on business last Thursday. Mr. Thada has his Runway mouse traps stamped out at Webster City and assembles and packs the traps in Klemme. He is making up a large number to take to the Waterloo Dairy Cattle Congress where he will have a space in the exhibit building.

Test Use Of Sweet Clover On Alkali Spots In Fields

Alkali spots occurring in corn fields and seriously diminishing the yield in the midst of good lands can be definitely restored to productivity by incorporating a sweet clover crop in the field's rotation and applying muriate of potash to the alkali centers.

Observations made at the Iowa State College Agronomy Farm near out the earlier claims as to the efficacy of sweet clover as a soil opener. By breaking the soil, sweet clover facilitates drainage and enables the potash, applied at the rate of 200 to 400 pounds per acre, to correct the alkalinity.

MR. AND MRS. C. A. LARSEN OBSERVE 23 ANNIVERSARY IN KANSAS CITY HOSPITAL

Mr and Mrs. C A Larsen, who were married twenty-three years last Thursday, celebrated the occasion at St Luke's hospital in Kansas City where Mr Larsen is recovering from a leg fracture.

The nurses served a nice dinner to Mr and Mrs Larsen in his room. Later in the afternoon, Titus Davis, father of Mrs. R A Jorgenson of Klemme brought the happy couple a large bouquet of roses.

Mr Larsen is now reported as being definitely improving and plans are being made to bring him home next week. He was injured six weeks ago Monday in the Kansas City stock yards when he was trampled by a steer, fracturing his leg.

Need Is Seen For Public Hospital In Hancock County

VOTERS TO PASS ON COUNTY HOSPITAL BOND ISSUE IN NOV.

Hancock County Spending $1,000 Per Month To Care For Patients Now

As election time draws nearer the voters of the county should acquaint themselves with the proposition of voting bonds for a county hospital.

To give tax payers of the county the facts regarding a county hospital the newspapers of the county will carry educational publicity from time to time setting forth the facts of the matter.

This week The Times carries such an article headed "Concerning The Proposed Hancock County Hospital." We ask our readers to turn to it and read it carefully.

During the past year and at the present time, Hancock County is spending approximately $1,000 each month to take care of those in the county who cannot pay their own bill for medicine and hospitalization, in hospitals outside the county. Much of this expense can be saved by caring for these people at home.

A hospital in the county would also be convenient and less expensive for those who now seek this service in other communities.

Read the article carefully and watch for further articles on the proposed county hospital.

Home-Grown Muskmelons Bid For Consumer Patronage

With the home-grown muskmelon season in full swing, A. T. Erwin, vegetable crops specialist at Iowa State College, advises the melon purchaser to look for a melon on which has ripened thoroughly on the vine, if he wishes a melon with the highest quality and most desirable flavor.

In a well-ripened melon, the aroma of fragrance is pronounced, there is indication that the stem parted from the melon easily, and the netting and ridging is deep.

Because home-grown melons are more apt to be mature when picked than shipped-in-melons, Mr. Erwin says they will have the best flavor. In response to a questionnaire to Iowa hotelkeepers throughout the state, 80 per cent of them expressed a preference for home-grown melons because they were superior in quality.

THREE MEN ON A HORSE

Get House In Shape Before First Pullets Start Laying

Alert poultrymen will get their laying houses repaired, cleaned, disinfected and in first class condition before the pullets are moved in, asserts Dr. Nelson F. Waters of the Poultry Husbandry Department, Iowa State College.

The first essential in good egg production, in Dr. Waters' opinion, is proper housing. In getting the house ready, he suggests that it be given a thorough cleaning and disinfecting throughout and that the cleaning include the equipment, such as the feeders and waterers.

Roosts should be removed and painted with a mixture of crank case oil and kerosene or some good commercial disinfectant. The house should be thoroughly sprayed with a strong disinfectant.

Windows should be checked over and one needs to make sure that the house has no drafts.

If all of these things are done before the pullets are brought in, then the birds will not be disturbed after they are placed in the house and start laying.

Republican Programs Will Be Heard On Iowa Radio Stations

The program is full of human interest and gives the listener something new in the way of a paid broadcast. There will not be a lot of "hot air," "ballyhoo" and noisy political boasting on the new program. Rather, it carries an interesting story throughout the series and is educational.

Effective Monday, September 26, the program will be heard Monday through Friday at the same hour, 8:00 to 8:15 p. m.

LOCAL REA COOPERATIVE PLANNING BIG FIELD DAY

Plans for Electrical Farm Equipment Demonstrations to be held October 24 and 25 on a farm near Belmond were made at a recent board meeting of the Hancock County Rural Electric Cooperative.

Details of the show, which is a part of a Tour of Illinois, Iowa, and Nebraska, were discussed with the regional representative of the Rural Electrification Administration, Washington, D. C. Twelve similar shows are being arranged in Iowa to aid farmers in knowing what different sizes and types of equipment will do for them by seeing the equipment in actual operation.

Members of the Wright County Rural Electric Cooperative, Clarion, and of the Boone Valley Rural Electric Cooperative, Renwick, are joining the local rural electric group in this demonstration. Farmers from Wright, Hancock and Hamilton counties, whether they are receiving current from REA lines or not will be invited to attend these educational demonstrations.

Farm machinery, plumbing, home appliance, and lighting manufacturers and their local representatives are cooperating with the Federal Rural Electrification Administration and this Cooperative to bring this caravan of equipment to inform farm families on electrical usages. They will be assisted by the Extension Service of Iowa State College and Mr. J. J. Vendelboe, Wright County Agent, and Miss Juliette Wylie, County Home Demonstration Agent. Extension agents from other counties included are also taking part in organizing this program.

Mr. Earl Rekow was named to represent the Hancock project on a general arrangement committee composed of Mr. E. O. Lewis, Belmond, a representative from the Boone Valley Project, and Mr. Rekow. Various committees from members of the three cooperatives will be chosen to have charge of labor, publicity, and arranging to have grain and other demonstration materials on hand.

Modern 'Holy War' Threatens Over Domination of Palestine

By Joseph W. LaBlanc

Races

Tiny Palestine is far smaller than the average American state, yet its city of Jerusalem is a religious shrine for Christians, Jews, Arabs. From a Biblical start, Christianity spread over the earth, largely deserting its birthplace. Hebrews also left, driven by the hated Arabs who later fell under Turkey's yoke. Not until the World War was this yoke thrown off with Great Britain's aid.

If Arabs expected Great Britain to hand them Palestine on a silver platter, Lord Balfour outfoxed them. In November, 1917, the foresighted foreign secretary saw Russia persecuting the Jews, possibly foreseeing a coming European revolution against them. So Palestine was favored as a national home for the wandering Jew and in 1923 Great Britain was granted a mandate over the land.

Had Lord Balfour's foresight included Jew-hating Adolf Hitler, he might have been less anxious to guide Palestine's destiny. Since 1923, Holy Land Jews have jumped from 75,000 to 375,000, Arabic population meanwhile standing at 325,000. Led by a Zionist world organization, zealous Hebrews have fostered such projects as Tel Aviv, all-Jewish city just outside Arabic Jaffa.

In 1929, Arab resentment boiled over into riot, again in 1936. This time worried Britain investigated, finally decided to place Jews on one side of the River Jordan, Arabs on the other. Since Arabs got the biggest share and Jews the most fertile share, neither was happy. Upshot was a new series of riots, starting early last July and continuing unbroken ever since. Last week, as harried British troops swept up after Jaffa's latest bombing, the world wondered how peace could ever come back to the Holy Land.

Jews recall that when Moses led their ancestors into the "promised land," some stayed on one side of the Jordan, some on the other. Thus they want more land, yet insist—publicly, at least—that Arabs can remain. Arabs recall the Holy Land has been their home 1,300 years, stochically threaten to fight unto death protecting their heritage.

Politics

What they lack at Washington, D. C., Republicans made up during a week-end of blistering heat and fried chicken at Washington, Ind. Their host was Homer E. Capehart, vice president of Buffalo's Rudolph Wurlitzer company, whose farm was covered with tents until it looked like a circus. Attending were Republicans from 11 states.

Day before, G. O. P. "strategists" met in Indianapolis behind closed doors, emerged with no comment except that they expected 70 more seats in congress after next November's election. Then, headed by Chairman John D. M. Hamilton and New York's Rep. James W. Wadsworth, they headed south to Mr. Capehart's circus tents.

To entertain 25,000 ardent Republicans, Ringmaster Capehart spent $25,000, fried 4,500 chickens, baked 40,000 clams and roasted three truckloads of corn. Said he: "I am sick and tired . . . of hearing businessmen and men of all other groups complain and talk against the New Deal and then do absolutely nothing about it."

Said Mr. Hamilton, who seemed content with talking about it: "Instead of hurling meaningless epithets at those who disagree with him, let Mr. Roosevelt explain to us why we have almost 13,000,000 unemployed, a number no less than in the very depths of the world-wide depression of 1929-32."

RINGMASTER CAPEHART
"I am sick and tired . . ."

At dusk the second day, speech-weary Republicans headed for home. But Franklin Roosevelt could not fail to heed the Capehart show. Next week, Indiana's enthusiasm showed signs of invading 47 other states.

Business

His crop control program bogged down under bountiful harvests, Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace discovered early last month that this year's wheat would more than fill America's granaries. Only remedy was export, and wheat-consuming nations are this year being offered more grain than they want by a dozen wheat-producing nations. To compete on the low-priced export market, to meanwhile give U. S. farmers a fair price, Secretary Wallace realized that subsidy would be necessary.

From Washington went invitations to grain dealers for purchase of wheat that the Federal Surplus Commodities corporation will sell abroad. Subsidy payments to producers, expected to be 15 or 20 cents per bushel, will come from $25,000,000 now available from customs receipts. To avoid throat-cutting, Secretary Wallace sought an export agreement with Canada, which also has large surpluses. Meanwhile came word of heavy exports from Poland and Argentina, giving promise of a badly glutted world market.

Foreign

As leader of Czechoslovakia's autonomy-seeking Sudetens, Konrad Henlein is admittedly nothing more than Adolf Hitler's mouthpiece. So anxious observers looked behind the mouthpiece last week when Konrad Henlein told Sudetens to "fight back" against "attacks" by the Czech government. Thus arose the latest crisis in a series of crises that has kept Europe jittery all summer.

At little Lanark, Scotland, Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir John Simon made the bold assertion that Adolf Hitler must not start a war over Czechoslovakia, else he might find Britain on his neck. Coming from a member of Neville Chamberlain's dictator-worshipping cabinet, that pronouncement sounded strange. But soon Sir John's boldness was explained. Said he:

SIR JOHN SIMON
Franklin Roosevelt made him bold.

"You will have read the striking speech made the other day by Mr. Cordell Hull, American secretary of state, when he laid stress on . . . the necessity for . . . friendly co-operation. What he said, and what President Roosevelt said a few days later in Canada, must waken a responsive echo in many British hearts."

Since Franklin Roosevelt had promised to help Canada in the event of invasion, Great Britain was clearly relying on a far-fetched hope of U. S. support. Two days later, it was plain the bluff had worked. Backing Britain came France, Russia, Rumania and Jugo-Slavia, each warning Germany to keep its hands off Czechoslovakia.

War

Important goal of Generalissimo Francisco Franco is the Almaden mercury mines of southwestern Spain, where an offensive began August 1. Last week revived Loyalist troops closed in on Rebel Gen. Gonzalo Queipo de Llano's advance positions at Cabeza del Buey, regaining practically all land lost since the Insurgent drive began. But Loyalists received bad news, too. In the Strait of Gibraltar, a 1,650-ton destroyer was waylaid by four Insurgent warships. Twenty were killed, 14 wounded, and the ship limped to port in hopeless condition.

Still 100 miles from Hankow, Japanese invaders captured Luan and Sukiaow on the Peiping-Hankow railroad, while defending Chinese captured three important towns on the upper Yangtze river. Meanwhile, in Washington, a U. S. foreign policy association predicted continuation of the Sino-Jap conflict until the U. S. shuts off supplies.

People

In 1894, an unconventional American actress named May Yohe married England's Lord Francis Hope, owner of the famous Hope diamond. In 1902, May Yohe tired of English royalty, eloped with Capt. Bradley Putnam Strong, son of a one-time New York mayor. In 1914, May Yohe married again, this time Capt. John A. Smuts. Last spring, the once notorious May Yohe was found on WPA rolls. Last week, aged 69, May Yohe died at Boston.

At Orange, Conn., John Coolidge, son of the late President Calvin Coolidge, entered politics for the first time by getting himself elected delegate to Connecticut's Republican state convention.

Labor

In medieval days, a plagued ship might carry disease from port to port. Last week, a plagued boxcar carried industrial paralysis through San Francisco's wholesale district. Cause of this strange epidemic was a shipment of school supplies which union warehouse employees said was loaded by strike-breakers. At five classifications of warehouses—public, grocery, liquor, drugs, hardware—San Francisco's boxcar was shunted to sidetracks. At each stop workers refused to touch it, employers retaliating by closing shop, discharging workers and abrogating contracts. After five days of wandering, this four-wheeled Nemesis had caused 2,000 workers to lose their jobs, had closed 153 plants.

Fortnight ago, President William Green of the American Federation of Labor talked with Franklin Roosevelt about the Wagner labor relations act. Outcome was a mutual agreement to amend it, providing more equitable consideration for both employer and employee. If this decision pleased William Green, it displeased C. I. O.'s John L. Lewis, who was comforted a few days later by re-appointment of Donald Wakefield Smith to the National Labor Relations board.

Thus satisfied, labor's two warring factions began wooing each other. David Dubinsky announced his International Ladies Garment Workers, now on the fence, would try once more to bring C. I. O., A. F. of L., together. William Green announced his willingness to puff a peace pipe. But overnight these gestures were nullified.

At Cincinnati, C. I. O.'s United Mine Workers and Kentucky's Harlan County Coal Operators association signed an agreement whereby Harlan county's mines will become a closed shop, whereby C. I. O.'s civil charges against mine owners will be dropped. Last month these same operators were prosecuted by the federal government for violation of the Wagner act, the trial ending in a hung jury.

Since C. I. O.'s new pact freezes out A. F. of L.'s Progressive Mine Workers of America, William Green found cause to fire a blast not only at John Lewis, but NLRB and the justice department as well. His charges: (1) that the pact forces A. F. of L. miners to join C. I. O. or get out; (2) that the justice department is playing ball with John Lewis by dropping its criminal charges against Harlan county operators; (3) that the pact conspires to violate the Wagner act.

Domestic

To land-grabbing Mexico, Secretary of State Cordell Hull has sent two notes protesting seizure of $10,000,000 in American-owned farm land, $200,000,000 in American-owned oil land. Latest of these protests was a downright lecture to Mexican President Lázaro Cárdenas, who would lose national prestige by back-tracking, who will lose conservative support if he fails to back-track. Though Mexico guardedly admits liability, she refuses to pay, indeed is unable to pay until her grievous economic condition improves. Last week, as observers wondered whether U. S. Ambassador Josephus Daniels had been negligent in allowing an altogether too-complex situation to arise, Cordell Hull heard that $25,000,000 more of American-owned property had been seized. Included, said unofficial reports, were 80,000 acres of Publisher William Randolph Hearst's ranch.

At Washington, Franklin Roosevelt announced the U. S. would gladly reduce armaments if other nations would reduce theirs. Next day the U. S. navy department drafted tentative plans for 12 new ships.

Sports

Last November, Capt. George E. T. Eyston came from England to Utah's Bonneville salt flats, there drove an automobile 311.42 miles per hour. Fortnight ago, Captain Eyston returned with his huge new Thunderbolt to race once more. While American Automobile association officials checked him with an electric eye, Racer Eyston zipped through the 13-mile northward run, hitting nearly 350 m. p. h. on the checked mile. But the electric eye failed on his southward run, so Thunderbolt set no record. Three days later Captain Eyston tried again with more luck. This time his black racer, whose tires must be changed after each run, whose thick aluminum cowlings are punctured by the terrific spray of salt, averaged 345.49 m. p. h. for his round trip.

MILK IS FAVORED AS POULTRY FEED

Stimulates Birds' Appetites During Hot Weather.

By Dr. W. C. Thompson, Poultry Husbandman, Rutgers University, N. J.

Because hot weather tends to lower feed consumption of poultry flocks, resulting in lower egg production, anything which stimulates the appetites of birds is of value in summer. For this purpose there is probably nothing better than milk.

Milk can be fed in the liquid form as either buttermilk or skim milk for drinking purposes when available in sufficient amounts. One hundred birds will consume between 35 and 40 pounds of liquid milk daily if they do not have water available, and a large quantity is needed when milk is used in this form. Ordinarily, it is not feasible to give birds milk only and, when a limited supply is available, it can be given the birds for a portion of the day, with water provided after the milk has been consumed.

The semi-solid or paste form of milk is very satisfactory for summer feeding, as it is palatable and the birds will consume it in rather large quantities, even under adverse weather conditions. When first used, it should not be fed to the extent of more than about 2 pounds for each 100 birds daily, but this can be increased gradually until 4 or 5 pounds can be fed without any detrimental results.

Milk in paste form is probably one of the best summer feeds for poultry. It is even somewhat superior to dried milk, unless the latter is used in a moist mash. Increasing the dry milk content of a dry mash does not usually produce any beneficial effects, because the birds do not increase their dry mash consumption during the summer, with the result that the increased milk content is of very little benefit. As a matter of fact, dry mash consumption is noticeably decreased during spells of hot weather.

The use of an increased quantity of milk in the proper form should be continued until late September, or until such time as more satisfactory weather conditions prevail.

Flies Not All to Blame For Drop in Milk Flow

Don't blame the flies for the drop in summer milk production, says H. R. Searles, extension dairyman, University Farm, St. Paul. Your feeding practices may need overhauling.

Summer is the low-cost period for the dairyman, and if cows go down in production when pastures begin to get short, he is losing an opportunity for profit.

The ripe mature grasses have about the feeding value of wild hay, and the dairyman can supplement these through a variety of ways. Second crop hay can be pastured, with some care to prevent loss from bloat when pasturing legumes.

Then, points out Searles, there is always regular barn feeding, which is practiced by the good dairyman every summer. Alfalfa or clover hay, if available, is cheaper than grain. Searles explains that the best dairyman of the state feed hay right through the summer, even when grass is plentiful. Feed what the cows will eat twice a day, he says. For the fresh, high-producing cows, a few pounds of grain will be needed, however.

Where hay is not available, about a half winter ration of grain will give excellent results. If there is a fair supply of grass, the ration can be any one of the farm grains available—corn, oats or barley. But where there is very little grass, the ration should be supplemented with its regular high protein feed, such as linseed oil meal, corn gluten meal, soybean meal, or cotton seed meal, up to 10 or 20 per cent of the grain mixture.

WANT to see what kind of role Clark Gable drew in his early days of making pictures? Then you'll have to go to "Painted Desert," recently made by RKO-Radio with George O'Brien, originally filmed by RKO-Pathé in 1930.

Lee Shumway plays the villain originally played by Gable.

By way of delving into the past again—all the still existing sets that were used for pictures made by Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks were demolished the other day. Some of them were nearly 20 years old. They'll make room for a setting for the next Goldwyn production, "The Last Frontier."

CLARK GABLE

Pity Carole Lombard. When her pal, Alice Marble, our No. 1 woman tennis player, was winning the Eastern Grass Courts championship at Rye, N. Y., Carole had to depend on daily telegrams to inform her of her friend's progress, because the matches weren't broadcast. Luckily for her the last one was played on Sunday—the strain of trying to work while it was going on would have been terrific!

The latest fashion news is to the effect that soon the girls will be wearing adaptations of the styles of 1904—the reason being that Claudette Colbert will soon be seen in "Zaza," and that the clothes she wears in the picture are so fetching that everybody's going to want clothes like hers.

Felix Knight, the young tenor who's being heard more and more often on the air, is going to keep right on until autumn with his nationwide program that is heard Fridays from 6:00 to 6:15, EDST, over NBC's red network. One of the things he gets excited about, between broadcasts, is the number of young people whose voices are being ruined because they're going to teachers who aren't really good. Says he knows any number of boys and girls in California, where he used to live, who would be successful if only they were properly taught.

But he can't tell them how to go about finding really good teachers—says that he just happened to be lucky; that he heard some people sing who sang the way he wanted to, and hunted up their teacher.

If you happen to be in New York and want to see some of your favorite radio stars when they're off duty, the place for you to go is the drugstore in the building where the NBC studios are located. Visiting movie folks and stage stars haunt the restaurants, but for some reason the radio stars turn like homing pigeons to that drug store.

Did you happen to be listening to the radio while the music from "Carefree," the new Rogers-Astaire picture, was broadcast with Irving Berlin, its author, in the studio? It's nice music, and apparently it's also a nice picture—but still the rumors grow and grow, to the effect that Astaire wants a new dancing partner, and Ginger wants a new leading man.

ODDS AND ENDS—Fred Ibbett, a veteran in the field of radio production, declares that his line of work offers the greatest opportunities to young newcomers of any phase of industry . . . Tyrone Power had a lot of fun on his trip East—one of his engagements being for luncheon with Madge Evans . . . Madge, incidentally, has fallen for the new fad of painting her finger nails white . . . Remember Julie Haydon, who left the stage for the movies, and couldn't get anywhere in the movies, and now is a terrific hit on the stage? . . . Well, the movie producers are after her again—can't see how it happened that she just never got any good parts when she was in Hollywood . . . "Four's a Crowd" is a pretty good picture; better put it on your list.

NEW YORK.—Policemen seem to have more social security than almost anybody else, if they behave themselves, and yet about 70

Seek Cause for Cops' Despondency

Just why "a policeman's life is not a happy one" was not made clear by Gilbert Sullivan, but members of the New York force are out to find out and do something about it.

Their new and unique "trouble clinic" has been investigating and prescribing. It lists eight reasons why policemen get in distress, and the list includes just eight branches of money trouble. The news today is that the department clinic is official sanction and is operating headquarters in the old World Building.

Patrolman Joseph J. Burkard of the traffic squad, an energetic, resourceful self-starter, is the department 20 years, pioneers the new clinic, with the aid of a young patrolman who is a student of psychology at Columbia university.

They brought in Dr. Menas Gregory, famous psychiatrist, and Dr. Carmyn J. Lombardo, also widely known as a specialist in mental disturbance. The clinic already has handled 150 cases, some of them of extremely serious nature.

The clinic was established under the Patrolmen's Benevolent association, of which Mr. Burkard was elected president last year. It is said to have been his original idea, suggested by similar work by the American Legion of which Mr. Burkard is a former New York county commander.

He has been a genial mixer in the department for many years, vice president of the glee club and long active in the affairs of the P. B. A.

A friend of this writer, gathering material for a book on New York, quoted to a young police lieutenant, Inspector Williams' remark that "There is more law on the end of a policeman's night-stick than there is in a decision of the Supreme court."

"That's bunk, and it always was," said the lieutenant. "College men are joining both the police and fire departments. J. Edgar Hoover, and others, are helping to bring about a new conception of a policeman. The 'flat-foot' era is ending."

And then, said my friend, the lieutenant disclosed that he was a college graduate and engaged in an informal discussion of psychology, training and methods in connection with police work. Would the cop have made their own psychological clinic in Inspector Williams' day?

THE late Texas Guinan gave George Raft a pair of gold-plated garters. They brought him luck, he still wears them. The slow-eyed, Italian, alumnus of New York's Hell's Kitchen has taken success in his easy dancing stride—he's an ex-hooper—but, like other movie picture stars, he's beginning to look a gift-horse in the mouth.

He doesn't like his role in Paramount's "St. Louis Blues," and the company suspends him. It is one more instance of increasing the thetic sensitivity in movieland.

In and around Hell's Kitchen he was a professional night weight boxer, winning 25 fights, kayoed seven times. He was an outfielder for the Springfield (Mass.) minor league team for two seasons. He did well enough, but it was a sideline, an impromptu hoofing and spotting which paced him into the night clubs and the big Broadway shows.

He achieved a sinister, repulsive suggestion in his dancing which made him known fraternally as "The Old Snake."

He was just looking on at Brown Derby in Hollywood when prowling director seized him as "type" and ruthlessly sloughed him into fame and fortune. His earnings report was $202,666, and only by Cooper and Baxter, and the male stars. He owns 45 suits of clothes and a piece of film.

Good light-colored outside paint contain white lead, often mixed with smaller quantities of other pigments. Colored pigments are added to the white to produce tinted paint, or used without the white to produce dark paints. It is generally recognized that the dark paints give better service under the weather and exposure conditions.

HEALTH

● Diet held important in satisfactory cure of goiter trouble, specialist says.

—By Dr. James W. Barton

THERE are many cases of goiter where the physician is undecided as to operation. He knows that the patient could afford the time and money and would get results almost immediately, but there are other matters that must be considered.

In many cases X-ray treatment solves the problem notwithstanding that this often requires months of treatment. In some early or threatened cases, rest and iodine give encouraging results.

Dr. Barton

Some years ago when a patient became nervous, easily upset, irritable, and was losing weight, some high-ranking physicians put these patients to bed in a dark, quiet room and fed them as much food as they could get them to eat. The food was made as inviting as possible and the patient's likes and dislikes in food were carefully considered. Sometimes the results were gratifying and other times the patients were really worse than before.

This "forced feeding" with hard exercise has been used with good results in patients with early mental symptoms. The food nourished and the exercise strengthened the body, the circulation of the blood was improved, and the quality of the blood itself was improved.

Importance of Diet.

Now some physicians are trying out this treatment of giving large quantities of food to their early thyroid or goiter patients. These patients have the usual symptoms—rapid heart, nervousness, poor appetite and sleeplessness.

Dr. Israel Bram, Philadelphia, author of "Exophthalmic Goiter and Its Treatment," has this to say in Medical Record:

"Diet is paramount in the treatment of exophthalmic goiter. The sufferer—usually very thin—must eat his way to health. All stimulants—tea, coffee, tobacco and alcohol—must be forbidden. Small amounts of meat may be given once a day. The average patient requires practically twice the amount of food that would be taken during health."

As much rest as possible should be taken but Doctor Bram points out that there are many of these patients who must continue working or starve.

Don't Get Excited Over Metabolism Test

When the heart beat is persistently rapid the first thought (if the heart itself be sound) is usually that the thyroid gland in the neck is manufacturing too much juice. As this juice speeds up the body processes, the heart rate is, of course, "speeded up."

To make sure that the thyroid gland is at fault and that a goiter, even if small, is present, the basal metabolism test is made. The patient is warned not to eat any food after his evening meal of the night before the test, and goes to the physician's office or to the hospital before breakfast the next morning. He lies down quietly with body and mind as much at ease as possible, breathes in oxygen and breathes out the "used" air (containing carbon dioxide) into a tube carrying it to the soda lime chamber where the amount of carbon dioxide can be measured later.

If too much oxygen is being used or too much carbon dioxide is being manufactured by the body processes while at rest, that is if the body processes are working at a rate of more than 15 per cent normal, goiter is considered to be present.

Test Often Fails.

This seems simple enough, but physicians know that if the patient is excited, perhaps afraid of the test because it may mean an operation, they cannot breathe slowly or naturally and the heart is faster because of this fear or worry. In addition, as the patient has not had any breakfast, he misses the "settling" or quieting effect of the food which would draw some blood down to the stomach from the "excited" brain.

For these and other reasons, if the first test shows more than 15 per cent, further metabolism tests are made.

It is only natural that with so much at stake—operation, anesthesia, stay in hospital, expense—patients are upset or excited at the first test, a few days' rest and reassurance by their physician and by the physician or nurse making the test, make more certain the true reading or measurement.

It should be remembered then that the basal metabolism rate must be persistently high when taken under favorable conditions (quietness of mind and body) before your physician and surgeon would consider operation or X-ray treatment necessary.

SEEDS...

California's eucalyptus trees grew from a handful of Australian seeds. Seeds of kindness will similarly enrich our personal lives.

—By WINIFRED WILLARD

SIMPLE thing for him to send from Australia by slow-sailing ship to his wife at home in California. Just a handful of seeds! Small thing to bother with. Big thing to reckon with in the long run. For this handful of seeds gave America all the glory of our eucalyptus, lovely in its silvery-blue-green foliage. Its spicy fragrance always announces its presence. Nothing else smells like it.

By the standard of the dollar, eucalyptus leaves, sap, bark and fiber turn themselves into good American money in the course of every year, for medicines, tonics, preparations that many thousands of us use without knowing how we got them.

Any inventory of California's claims to pre-eminence—roses the year round, sun-kissed oranges, sun-made raisins—must reckon with the wealth of the eucalyptus and with the two people, unpretentious and unassuming, who laid that wealth in California's lap—William Taylor, pioneer, preacher, practical man of affairs and his little home-making wife. She, too, looked into the future, seeing what these seeds could become of beauty and blessing. Then she did the practical things needed to make them grow. The seeds her husband sent her were worthless until she planted them!

Growth of a Friendship

Two travelers on happy holiday in Florida stopping to call on a friend. It was a carefree, glad day under the palm trees beside the lovely lake in Winter Park. They wrote about it to one whose name was often on their lips that day. Return mail brought a handful of seeds and introduction to other friends away from home and restless for companionship. These seeds started to sprout. Passing days cultivated them until a rare and lovely treasure of friendship grew that becomes more beautiful with the years.

The auditor of an important educational group was a regular traveler. Traveling grows monotonous but offers a chance generally to catch up on rest and to read a bit. This particular trip was long. The auditor was weary of figures and of balances that did not easily balance. She wanted to sleep away some of the hours on the train. Across the aisle was a little old lady, a stranger. She did not seem to have any promising seeds in her hands. She was nervous and restless, a bit fearful. She seemed eager for companionship. It developed that she carried a heavy personal load and greatly needed a human safety valve. Most of us do. So the seasoned traveler put away her desire to doze and gave herself up to listening while the little lady talked. It was not much to do. But it cost its price.

Seeds must have time to grow. And there is never any way to know ahead which seeds will pay to plant, which will grow and make our gardens of life its loveliest. We have to take chances on them same as on everything else. These special seeds which the traveler sowed in a section of the sleeping car grew to friendship that abided until that wistful little body who wasn't quite accustomed to trains and traveling, slipped away across the Final River. Now tangibles are not the only values. Sometimes they are not valuable at all. But from the little lady to the traveler who wanted to doze and pass the time but who was willing instead to be friendly and helpful, there came a gorgeous diamond "because you were so good to me that day." Little thing, big thing, either view you take.

Adventure in Companionship

Queer things—seeds! Sometimes we don't recognize them. Take that luncheon at Washington's Mayflower hotel one spring Saturday. There were 300 guests. The First Lady was to tell us her ideal of women in politics. At my right was a friend. The seat at the left was vacant. No sign of a seed. Then a pleasant voice asked permission to sit beside me. There was the seed unseen before, already sprouting. The days and weeks that followed saw it grow through comfortable companionship and congenial fellowship, becoming a real adventure along the alluring lanes of friendship.

However sophisticated we are however far we shy away from show of sentiment, it yet remains that every forest oak was once within the tiny compass of the acorn. That sounds old-fashioned but is as modern as today. Life continues to grow great results from seeds so small that often we fail to see or to believe how they can be important to our purposes. When our spirits are negative, we sometimes cast these seeds away, losing what might become very precious to us. Not every handful of seeds produces a glory of eucalyptus. Not every train acquaintance pays the score with a gleaming diamond. That would put the whole business on too low a level. But every seed holds unpredictable possibilities.

Help Them Cleanse the Blood of Harmful Body Waste

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as Nature intended—fail to remove impurities that, if retained, may poison the system and upset the whole body machinery. Symptoms may be nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up at night, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—a feeling of nervous anxiety and loss of pep and strength. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination. There should be no doubt that prompt treatment is wiser than neglect. Use Doan's Pills. I attended a meeting of Republican committee men and women held at Garner last Thursday evening at which time plans for the campaign were mapped out. I was greatly pleased that this year the party plans a quiet, easy-going campaign... minus all the hot air and bologna of former campaigns. I think the Republicans in Iowa will really get some place this year by carrying on a dignified and educational campaign. The Republicans in Iowa this year have a ticket that they do not need to apologize for and do not have to make a lot of noise to detract the voters' attention from certain office seekers who are weak sisters on the ticket, as has been the case in some former years. The ticket is all made up of good staunch, honorable citizens of Iowa.

Play with matches and you might get burned. Fool around with water and you'll get wet... and that was the case Saturday evening when some bystanders on the street had to get a closer look at the new fire truck in operation. They got an eyeful... and they also got thoroughly sprinkled with H2O. Anyway, the firemen showed the skeptical that they "really had something there."

Klemme is "Little, But Lively," but I am afraid we will have to adopt a new slogan before long, as it is rapidly going out of the "little" class. I put my ear to the ground and heard more noises of building going on in this community. Klemme is one town in north Iowa that is stepping ahead of the parade. Not many towns of 500 population can boast of such modern improvements as a deep well, paved street, sewer system, two expensive new churches, a beautiful park, large modern stores, Iowa's best kept residence district, the last word in fire fighting equipment... and coming up, a new $72,000 school house, new homes and business places. Now let's reach out and bring the natural gas lines into Klemme to finish the job!

I-S-A-S
DEFEATISM

The chief trouble with a lot of Republicans, according to a wise political observer who expressed his opinion in no uncertain terms the other day, is a spirit of defeatism. How often, he continued, does one meet a Republican on the street who will say: "Yes, things are looking up in our neighborhood. More criticism of Roosevelt since he started his purge. This plunging the nation into debt further and further has a lot of people scared. Still, what's the use? You can't beat four and a half billion dollars. The New Dealers will buy themselves back into office."

Of course if the Republicans and anti-New Dealers permit themselves to be frightened out of action by the specter of four and a half billion dollars, then the New Dealers will ride back into power.

But if they get out to attend Republican meetings, make themselves heard, and above all, if they go out to the polls and vote when election day rolls around, then the results will be a lot different than many pessimists expect them to be. It may be possible to buy a close election, but is impossible to buy a landslide. And there will be a landslide of anti-New Deal voters if those who oppose the present condition of affairs with its purging and its experimentation, take the trouble to register their honest convictions. The spirit of "what's the use" is made to order for disciples of the new dispensation.

China Ware Luxury Until About Two Centuries Ago

As late as 200 years ago China was a luxury of the wealthy. Indeed many considered it economy to order solid silver table services, which did not break and add the cost of occasional replacements. Everyday tableware was generally of pewter, writes Emerald Bristow in the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

For the poor and for the servants' tables wood, leather or tin served for plates, bowls and drinking mugs. Stoneware and crude crockery had been produced since Tudor times, but was used sparingly because of its being easily broken when provided for servants' use and because it was never a beautiful product of fine workmanship worthy to be brought to the tables of gentlemen of fashion.

Probably the first English dinner table set entirely with a china service was the state dinner given by James I in the early 1600s. All the plates and bowls were imported Chinese porcelain, and the guests were given the plates they had used as souvenirs of the memorable occasion. Oriental porcelain was the only fine china to be had until about a century later and, being imported by slow sailing vessels or tedious lengthy caravans all across Europe, this was too expensive for ordinary use at table even for the wealthy. So plates and bowls from the Orient were kept as prized ornaments, like the Chinese vases and colorful little porcelain figurines.

English and other European potters tried to copy the beautiful Chinese porcelain. They discovered two interesting ceramic fabrics in their tireless experiments that were all doomed to failure until special clays were smuggled from China. These were the salt glaze ware, which was not much admired in its own day but is much sought by collectors.

Indians' Names Serve as a Part of Their Record

Indian children have an infant name for identity, and an "earned" name, usually acquired in the teens, which is given for outstanding achievement or personal idiosyncrasy. A third name is usually given, called a "dream" name, when the recipient has dreamed of his guardian in the spirit world. The name by which he is best known, however, is the second or "earned" name.

An infant Indian name is not associated with any family, as we use a surname, but merely puts a temporary little tag on the child, according to a writer in the Washington Star. It is often rather amusing, such as the name "Two Ways," given an Indian toddler because he went first to the right, then to the left when learning to walk.

When in his teens an Indian boy may distinguish himself with the bow and arrow. Perhaps his aim is so fine that he may hit a mark expertly, even when aiming over his shoulder to the rear; in this case, he will surely be given the achievement name of "Aims Back." Every one will thus know of his cleverness.

Since the American Indians are forced to live in a modern world, full of white people, with names chosen in a different way from their own, many of them have prefixed American names to their own for convenience. So we find such names as Tom Day Rider, Charles Ironbreast, and Mike Little Dog among the Indians.

The Ground Cherry

Many wild plants have names that tell something about their fruits. The ground cherry is in this group. One of its names is the Chinese lantern plant. This refers to the unusual shape of the fruit. Each little berry is less than half an inch in diameter, but it is encased in a brown inflated case which looks something like a miniature Chinese lantern. A different kind of ground cherry growing in the Southwest is known as the wild tomato and is especially relished by the Zuni Indians as well as the whites. Indians make a relish with the ripe fruit by boiling it, then crushing it in a mortar with raw onions and chili. In pioneer days of the Middle West housewives used to gather ground cherries for preserves.

Most men find it easier to take two steps backward than to take one forward.

Regimental Colors Serve as Official Army Record

The Lancashire Fusiliers wear roses in their hats when celebrating to recall the battle of Minden, where the Twentieth Foot, East Devonshire regiment (which became the Lancashire Fusiliers in 1881) fought in rose gardens, says a writer in Pearson's London Weekly. The Royal Welch Fusiliers wear the "flash," a black silk rosette. It once protected the red coat from the powdered pigtail.

The Gloucestershire regiment, the old Twenty-eighth, wear their regimental badge on the back as well as the front of their caps.

This is because in the Peninsular war they were once attacked both from the front and rear and had to face about to repel the enemy.

The Royal Fusiliers, Buffs and Royal Marines have the exclusive right of marching with bayonets fixed through the city of London, because they were formed in the Seventeenth century out of the city's trained bands of militia.

But it is generally on the regimental colors that the regiment writes its history. For instance, the king's color of the South Wales Borderers bears a silver wreath in memory of the lives that were given to save it from capture at Isandhlwana. The Queen's, Royal West Surrey, have a Paschal lamb on the regimental flag. It was the crest of Queen Catherine of Braganza, in whose honor the regiment was raised by King Charles II to garrison Tangier.

Regiments with a record of service in Egypt have a sphinx on their flag; a tiger means that the unit fought in Bengal; a castle surmounting a key represents the fortress of Gibraltar, the regiments with it on their flag served through the four years' siege of 1799-83.

A rose below a crown denotes the six British regiments which fought in the Dutch service in the Seventeenth century.

In fact, the regimental color is the regiment's record and it is to honor these deeds from a great past that people take off their hats when the colors are carried by.

Raisin Flavor Observed First by the Egyptians

The early Egyptians first discovered the flavor of raisins. A few scattered bunches of grapes were left on the vines at harvest time. The concentration of grape sugars provided a new fruit. In the First century, Asia Minor became the center of production; by 1300 A. D., Spain and Hungary were chief markets, and Greece competed. But in the Twentieth century, America's California, in the San Joaquin valley, with an average production of over 200,000 tons annually, became the world market.

It was early in 1834, writes Kirtley Scott in the Louisville Courier-Journal, that a cargo of raisins was brought "around the Horn into California from Boston and sold at a high price. It was the inception, this 220-pound shipment of grapes dried on the vine, for a giant industry which markets 400,000,000 pounds of a single product.

The modern raisin industry began in 1851 when Colonel Augustin Hernazthy imported some Muscats of Alexandria from Malaga in Spain and planted them on his San Diego ranch. Ten years later, the governor of the state sent a commission to Europe to select the best varieties of grapes obtainable there.

Indian Reservations

The five civilized tribes of Indians were established in Oklahoma long before the Civil war, states a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer. They were southern tribes, and were removed beyond the Mississippi to make room for settlers. The five were the Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Creeks and Seminoles. These Indians took the southern side during the war. For that and other reasons they were deprived of some of the western part of their lands. On the ceded portions the government established Sacs, Foxes, Cheyennes and other plains Indians. Later other tribes were moved in. In the Indian Territory, the eastern half of the present state, there were in 1900 not only the five civilized nations, but also reservations for Modocs, Ottawas, Peorias, Quapaws, Senecas, Shawnees and Wyandottes. In Oklahoma Territory there were Kaw, Osage and Wichita reservations and one for Kiowas, Comanches and Apaches.

Earthworms and Lightning Bugs

That earthworms turn into lightning bugs or fireflies is a common myth in some sections of the United States. The belief no doubt arose from the fact that the lightning bug or firefly is a species of beetle which passes through a larva stage. Adults, larvae and eggs are all luminous. Observation of the various species of glowworms may also have contributed to the popular belief. None of these luminous creatures is closely related to the common earthworm.

Charity Overdone

The Jains, a religious sect numbering, in all India, about one and a quarter million, had their origin in the Fifth century B. C. The great distinction between its members and the Hindus seems to lie in regard for animals, says Katherine Mayo in "The Face of Mother India." A poor Jain with infested clothes will carefully transfer his tenant from the cloth to better purgation on his bare flesh, she declares.

Yellow-Bellied Sea Snake

Though the yellow-bellied sea snake may not be ferocious-looking, it is nothing to get gay with, according to a writer in the Washington Post. A member of the dreaded cobra clan, it is among the most deadly of poisonous reptiles. In captivity it is particularly dangerous, becoming sullen and striking at everyone. It is the only poisonous sea snake found in the waters around America, although there are 49 other species just as deadly, elsewhere. As the name indicates, this slender snake is a brilliant yellow underneath, though its top side is black. It has no gills, must come to the surface to breathe. It is sometimes caught in fishing nets.

The Fasces on Our Coins

The fasces on our dimes are emblems common to works of art. The fasces were the rods made into a bundle to enclose a protruding ax and were borne by the ancient Roman lictors to execute the judgment of the magistrate. Adolph Alexander Weinman, a native of Germany and a member of the United States commission of the fine arts, in 1916 designed our 10-cent pieces and the 50-cent coins.

Muffs Match Hats In Latest Trend

Muffs that match hats are among the latest fads to tempt women seeking the unusual in costume accents.
Many different decorative fabrics such as matelasse crepe, embroidered wool and velvets are being used for these as are the numerous fur fabrics. The hats are of the turban type, always high and often draped. The muffs are variously shaped, depending upon the fabric.
Fur materials, for example, are cut very simple, while the decorative materials are draped, twisted and bow-trimmed.

Lesson for September 18

JONATHAN: COURAGEOUS FRIENDSHIP

LESSON TEXT—I Samuel 20:4-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—A friend loveth at all times—Proverbs 17:17.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Noble Prince Jonathan.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Noble Prince Jonathan.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—
The Adventure of Friendship.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—
The Cost of Being a Friend.

Without question, the most precious possession any man or woman has (apart from his fellowship with God if he is a Christian, and the love of his own family) is friendship. It is the flower that blooms by the side of the rugged pathway of life. Like many flowers, some friendships need to be cultivated and encouraged.

It has been said that the love of a woman for another woman is a beautiful thing, the love of a man for a woman an even more devoted and precious thing, but that the bond of love between man and man surpasses all in its strength and glory. Some might question such a statement, and yet it is true that between man and man there is the possibility of the highest type of friendship. David and Jonathan stand at the head of an inspiring list of men who loved each other with their whole souls.

The lesson for today calls for a careful reading of the incidents in the life of Jonathan and David recorded in I Samuel, chapters 14, 18, 19, and 20, as well as the first chapter of II Samuel. It is a story which will richly reward a careful reading. Considering the printed portion in the light of this background we note six things that characterized this great friendship.

I. Cultivated (v. 4).
Friendships must be "kept in repair." Foolish and almost wicked is that man who by boorishness offending his fellowmen, or by neglecting the thoughtful words and acts that cultivate friendship, drives men away from him. "He that hath friends must show himself friendly" (Prov. 18:24). Consider the admonition of our Lord in Luke 16:8, 9, where he urges the righteous use of even our worldly possessions to cultivate eternal friendships.
Read what Jonathan did in I Sam.
18:3-5, only one of his many loving and thoughtful acts.

II. Courteous (v. 8).
David asked that Jonathan deal kindly with him, and the entire story reveals that he did just that, always. More friendships are wrecked on the rocks of little dis-courtesies than in almost any other way.

We live in an age which affects an outward veneer of culture but which is at heart often thoughtless and unkind. Let Christian men and women be courteous. They should be as followers of the gentle Jesus, and it will bring them countless friends.

III. Candid (v. 9).
Friendships that last must be built on absolute candor, not the kind that delights in telling an unpleasant truth, but one which speaks the truth in love. Jonathan told David the truth.

IV. Courageous (vv. 12, 13).
Jonathan was such a faithful son that when the time of parting came he stayed with his wicked father rather than go with David, whom he loved. But he was true to David even though he knew it would incur the wrath of his father if that friendship became known.

Things that cost us nothing are usually "worth it." Real friendship calls for sacrifice, standing by in the night hours, sharing burdens, loyal even though others may condemn us for it.

V. Covenant Keeping (vv. 16, 17).
Covenants entered into by solemn treaties in our time are soon discarded as "scraps of paper." People make promises to one another that they never intend to fulfill. Jonathan and David made a covenant and kept it. True friends do not violate their loving agreements.

This matter of trickery and falsehood in life and business is one that deeply troubles the writer of these notes. He sees unmistakable evidence that this perverse spirit has come into the precincts of the church itself. We should have a revival of honesty in office, home, state, and church.

VI. Complete (v. 17).

"He loved him as he loved his own soul"—such a friend was Jonathan. His devotion to David had no qualifying "strings" on it. He was not seeking something for himself. The closest he came to that was to bring his children into the covenant with David (v. 15), and who could question the propriety of such devotion between true friends?
He saw that David was to supplant Saul as king, and in the face of his own interest as Saul's son, he put David forward.

Friendship is akin to our relationship to God in that it calls for a complete giving of ourselves, if we are to be true friends. This does not mean that individuality is lost, or special interests and abilities destroyed, but it does mean a whole-souled desire for our friend's welfare, and a complete devotion of our all to his good.

WHAT to EAT and WHY

C. Houston Goudiss Enumerates the Nutritious Values of the BANANA

Explains How Our Most Satisfying Food Fruit Helps to Maintain Health at All Ages.

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS
6 East 39th Street, New York City.

BEFORE the discovery of the vitamins and before we knew as much regarding the body's mineral requirements, interest in food was centered around proteins, carbohydrates and fats. Fruits which in general supply little protein and fat, and widely varying amounts of carbohydrates, received scant consideration as a source of essential nutrients.

But with our steadily increasing knowledge of vitamins and of the importance to the body of a long list of essential mineral elements, fruits have assumed a commanding place in nutrition.
And those who follow the primary rule of a well balanced diet and serve fruit twice daily have been rewarded with increased health and vigor.

In addition to their minerals and vitamins, fruits are valued because of their bulk or cellulose which helps to insure regular health habits.

The Most Economical Fruit

Many homemakers consider that fruits as a class are among the more expensive items included in the food budget.

But that statement is far too general and indicates a lack of information concerning the comparative nutritive values of the different kinds of fruit. For example, it has been said of the delicious and economical banana, that it gives more nutritive as well as money value than almost any other food.

Fruits, in general, are frequently divided into two classes;
they are known as flavor fruits when they contain 80 per cent or more of water and as food fruits when the water content is less than 80 per cent. Bananas are a food fruit of the first order!

Ripe bananas are rich in carbohydrates and furnish the body with splendid energy values, with a minimum tax on the digestive system.

Double Fuel Value

When fully ripened, this fruit provides quick energy because a certain amount of its sugars are almost immediately absorbed by the body. On the other hand, several hours must elapse before the remaining sugars are completely assimilated. Thus, eating bananas provides a continuous supply of energy for a considerable period.
They not only help to promote rapid recovery from fatigue but also furnish a continuing supply of energy which keeps one from becoming hungry again too soon after a meal.

The edible portion of one average-sized banana weighs about 3½ ounces and provides 100 calories.
It takes almost the same weight of white potato to yield the same number of calories.

Bananas a Protective Food

Bananas take an important position among the protective foods, because they are a good source of four vitamins, A, B, C and G, and contain a total of 11 minerals.
They leave an alkaline ash following digestion.

Fully ripened bananas are easily digested and are mildly laxative.

Valuable in Child's Diet

Bananas deserve a prominent place in the child's diet from infancy to maturity. Some baby specialists prescribe mashed and strained ripe bananas as one of the first solid foods to be introduced in the infant's diet. The ripe banana is considered to be especially valuable at the time when sugar is withdrawn from the formula and the baby is given whole milk for the first time. The calories in the bananas take the place of the calories previously received from the sugar, and thus weight gains are steadily maintained.

Help Children Gain Weight

Because of their high caloric value, plus their content of minerals and vitamins, bananas may well be used regularly throughout childhood.

Bananas and milk make an excellent food combination because the milk supplements the fruit with protein, fat, minerals and vitamins. This combination is often used as a supplementary lunch for underweight children, and carefully conducted studies have indicated its usefulness in helping youngsters to gain weight.

Almost all children like the taste of bananas and they do not seem to tire of this bland and pleasing fruit. And though the banana is regarded as a solid food, it can, if desired, be mashed and whipped into liquid form and combined with milk to make a healthful and nourishing beverage.

Ideal for the Elderly

If elderly individuals are to maintain top health, fruits should be given a prominent place in their diet. But many fruits are avoided by individuals past middle age, either because their acid taste is displeasing or because they present difficulties in mastication. Ripe bananas, however, practically melt in the mouth. Being easily digested, they are a fortunate choice for elderly persons, providing necessary energy

OVERWEIGHT.

Spoils Your Looks Impairs Efficiency

... And it may seriously affect your health. If you are over 30, and weigh more than the normal weight for your height at the age of 30, the chances are that you would benefit greatly by a rational program of weight reduction.

You are invited to write to C. Houston Goudiss for his scientific Reducing Bulletin, which outlines the safe, certain and comfortable method of weight reduction by counting calories. It includes balanced reducing menus and a chart showing the caloric value of all the commonly used foods.

With it, you can easily compute the caloric value of every meal you eat.

Just write to—values with a minimum of digestive effort.

Most Versatile Fruit

Bananas are always in season and are usually most inexpensive.
It is desirable, of course, that only fully ripened bananas be eaten raw. That is because their constituents vary with the degree of ripeness.

Bananas are picked when they are green and hard, and the carbohydrate content is almost entirely starch. As they ripen, the starch is converted into easily digested sugars.

In fully ripened bananas—those in which brown flecks appear on the yellow skins—the starch has almost entirely disappeared and the flavor has been developed to its highest point. The all-yellow banana is also ripe enough for eating and it is likewise firm enough for cooking. Partially ripe bananas—those which are yellow with a green tip—may be cooked and served as a vegetable or as dessert.

Considering their availability, ease of digestion, high food value and economy, bananas deserve to be classed as one of the staple foods in every well planned dietary.

Questions Answered

Mrs. G. R. McK.—When peas and beans cause discomfort, owing to their tendency to form gas, they can frequently be eaten without distress in pureed form.

Miss M. L. A.—Both sweet and white potatoes contain vitamins A, B and C; but sweet potatoes are a much better source of vitamin
A than white potatoes.

HOW to SEW

By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

A LETTER comes telling the story of mats a clever girl designed for her dressing table.
The problem was to make them to fit spaces of unusual size. Her room color scheme was blue and white and a design of white embroidered snow crystals on cool blue linen was what she wanted.
Here is the way she achieved a charming result.

The linen was cut the desired size and narrow hems creased

Cooking Doughnuts.—Add a teaspoonful of vinegar to the cold fat to be used in cooking doughnuts and the doughnuts will not absorb grease.

Crisp Celery.—To make celery firm and crisp and a bit salty in flavor, soak in cold salty water for an hour before using.

Drying Fabric Shoes.—To dry wet satin or fabric shoes, stuff with soft paper, pushing it in to shape but not strain the material.

Treating a New Broom.—Before a new broom is used, soak it in a strong salt water solution and dry thoroughly. It will last longer.

For Creaming Butter.—A perforated wooden spoon is best for creaming butter. It does the job more efficiently.

with a warm iron. The hems were then backstitched in white from the right side with three strands of six-strand mercerized embroidery cotton. She wanted the arrangement of the snow crystals to be helter-skelter—just as they would fall; so she took a handful of coins and tossed them onto the linen. She drew around each coin where it fell.

Still using three strands of the white cotton she took four stitches across the marked circle and then brought the needle out in the center, as shown here in step 2, ready to take a tiny stitch to bind the long stitches together. The crystals were embroidered over the long stitches, the larger ones being more elaborate than the smaller as illustrated here. The stitch used is shown in step 3. Ninety other embroidery stitches are pictured in my Sewing Book No. 2.

France, Britain Turn to U. S.

In Search for War Support

—By Joseph W. LaBine—

Domestic

Chief U. S. interest in the current European squabble (see FOREIGN) has been America's chance of staying neutral. If they once felt secure under the state department's isolation policy, under the neutrality act or under the Johnson act forbidding loans to debtor nations, that cozy feeling was dissipated last fall. In his famed Chicago speech, Franklin Roosevelt pointed to the hopelessness of isolation, favored aggressive U. S. action to preserve world peace.

Last month, Franklin Roosevelt spoke again at Kingston, Ont., promised American aid against invasion of Canada. Though any U. S. President would favor such a policy, the Canadian speech came at a time when anxious British and French were seeking allies in their bluff game against Adolf Hitler. Thus, into the international spotlight were thrown U. S. Ambassadors Joseph P. Kennedy to Great Britain, William C. Bullitt to France. To each fell the job of explaining U. S. policy in European foreign offices.

"No human being could say..."

Last week, each spoke, cutting through diplomatic red tape in a blunt manner that made touchy British statesmen quake, that made the folks back home shudder over the realities of Europe's current crisis.

At Bordeaux, Ambassador Bullitt uncorked a bombshell, flavoring an informal talk on French wines with bouquets about U. S.-French friendship. Said he: "France and the United States are indefectively united in war as in peace... by our devotion to liberty and democracy... by our old friendship, by the aid we brought each other in our hour of distress."

Next day, dedicating a monument to American World war dead, he spoke again: "If war should break out in Europe no human being could say whether the United States would become involved."

But in the very next breath he gave proud France and Great Britain another thought to mull over, hinting that Germany's present economic plight might be their responsibility: "If our effort for peace is to achieve anything, it must be based on the ability to put ourselves in other men's shoes, recognizing the truth of this saying 'There, but for the grace of God, go I.'"

In London, Ambassador Kennedy emerged from a conference with Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain blurring to newsmen that Britain wanted to know whether she could expect U. S. aid. No sooner had he spoken than the London Evening News criticized Joe Kennedy's outspokenness. Obviously proud England was piqued that the world should know she was actively seeking U. S. aid. But that did not stop him from rushing to Aberdeen, Scotland, where he demanded that the world's youth be given a better deal than "a short life carrying a gun."

Foreign

Italy's Benito Mussolini, who could do no better than create mild furore with an anti-Jewish drive, must have envied the headlines being made by his fellow dictator, Adolf Hitler. Since early August, the one-time Austrian housepainter has kept all Europe in a "crisis," until last week the word "crisis" began losing its significance.

To Berchtesgaden, der fuhrer's Alpine chalet, sped Konrad Henlein, Czechoslovakian Sudeten leader whose followers want autonomy and eventual annexation by Germany. While Fuhrer Henlein talked with Fuhrer Hitler, German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop closeted himself in Berlin with Great Britain's Ambassador Nevile Henderson, emerged after assuring the nervous Englishman that Germany plans no hasty step in the Czech squabble.

But Europe had a hopeless case of war fever. If Adolf Hitler's 1,000,000 war-gaming soldiers had gone home, tension might have been relieved. Instead, several hundred thousand Nazi warriors massed on the Rhine frontier, visting new fortifications they would use in a war on France. Paris bristled immediately. Almost overnight, 300,000 reservists were rushed to the Maginot line.

Meanwhile, Great Britain, enjoying Ambassador Henderson that he might warn Germany of England's inability to remain out of any conflict der fuhrer might start. Inasmuch as Ambassador Henderson has been alternately warning and pleading with Germany since early August, his ultimatum probably fell on deaf ears.

At Prague, observers watched the result of Konrad Henlein's conversation. England's mediator, Viscount Runciman, scurried around. The Czech cabinet met secretly, finally emerged to offer Sudetens (1) territorial autonomy; (2) recognition of their full equality in the Czechoslovak state; (3) recognition of full equality of the German language in Sudeten areas.

This, amounting to complete surrender, might have created a sensation had Adolf Hitler not been stealing the show again. At Nuremberg, before 1,000,000 Nazis attending the annual party congress, der fuhrer defied the world, boasted of Germany's power and praised his two lukewarm allies, Japan and Italy.

At Takaoka, fire leveled 2,000 buildings, caused 100 deaths. At Osaka, 15,000 homes were flooded. At Kobe, 31 ships sank. Such was the aftermath of Japan's second typhoon in five days.

Politics

Behind Franklin Roosevelt lay two smarting political defeats. South Carolina's Democrats had elected Ellison D. ("Cotton Ed") Smith over his objection. California's Democrats had licked his favorite, Sen. William Gibbs McAdoo. These defeats, plus earlier primary shellacks, and the prospect of more losses in Maryland and Georgia, made Franklin Roosevelt realize that next winter's congress will be stubborn as an army mule and completely devoid of party lines.

Mulling these thoughts, the President soon offered a solution. At his semi-weekly press conference he announced his support of liberal candidates regardless of their political ancestry. Boasted he: "If there is a good liberal running on the Republican ticket, I would not have the slightest objection to his election. Good of country rises above party."

In effect, Mr. Roosevelt said he could no longer be regarded as an organization Democrat, that he is a liberal—whatever that means—in this fall's primaries, in November's election, and in 1940.

The President's apparent hope was that enough liberals, both Republican and Democratic, will be elected next November to give Roosevelt liberalism a clear majority over conservatives of both parties. If that was his idea, Republican Chairman John D. M. Hamilton found the statement a convenient signal for another of his fanatical tirades against New Dealism.

Explained he: "The true Republicans running for congress this year are liberals. Most of the Democrats seeking re-election are not. True liberals are those making a determined fight against centralization of powers in one man. True liberals would never vote for... New Deal schemes to restrict production... for irresponsible fiscal measures."

Soundest comment came from Illinois' Sen. James Hamilton Lewis, vacationing in California where

CHAIRMAN HAMILTON
"True Republicans... are liberals."

Sheridan Downey had just won senatorial nomination on a state national platform. "There are no national political parties left in the nation," he said. "The California election... is an expression of what may now come in every state... of gentlemen running for federal office upon wholly state issues and local remedies."

Three days later, Franklin Roosevelt spoke at Denton, Md., seeking the scalp of Sen. Millard E. Tydings. Again hitting the liberal smelter, he answered "Ham" Lewis' comment: "The Democratic party will live and continue to receive the support of the majority of Americans just so long as it remains a liberal party. If it reverts, it will fail."

Religion

Though Fascism and Naziism jibe in theory, Fascist Italy has never discriminated against Jews like Nazi Germany. But last month, Italian Jews began tasting the bitter fruits of Adolf Hitler's friendship for Benito Mussolini. First hint of this trend was expulsion of Jews from all Italian administrative offices, a step which brought down the wrath of Pope Pius, and brought an equally righteous reply from Il Duce.

Fortnight ago, it became clear that Italy was only starting a campaign of racial intolerance that will equal Germany's. From the council of ministers came a decree that all Jews who settled in Italy, Libya or the Aegean islands since 1918 must get out. Still open, presumably, is Italian East Africa (Ethiopia), an unpopular land where few Italians wish to live.

Next day, another decree closed all state-recognized schools to Jewish teachers and students. As sadistic Hebrews began resigning their jobs and inquiring about emigration, only the most optimistic thought Italy's anti-Jewish campaign was at an end.

Aviation

At Burbank, 10 speed pilots nosed their ships into the rising sun, bound for Cleveland's annual air show, 2,042 miles away. Ahead was a handsome prize for the winner of the annual Bendix race. Among the best to leave was attractive, 29-year-old Jacqueline Cochran, whose fast Seversky plane had set an east-west record the week before.

Eight hours, 10½ minutes later, Jacqueline Cochran nosed into Cleveland, winner of aviation's most coveted award, a $9,000 prize which was boosted $2,500 because a woman won. Ten minutes later she left for Bendix, N. J., winning $1,000 more and setting a new coast-to-coast women's record of 10 hours, 7 minutes, 10 seconds.

JACQUELINE COCHRAN

Jacqueline Cochran did not need the $12,500 she won, for her husband is Floyd B. Odum, head of the 140-million-dollar Atlas corporation that controls several dozen prosperous companies. Orphaned as a child, taking her first job at 21, owning her first beauty shop at 20, America's new No. 1 woman flier eventually controlled a chain of such shops from Florida to California. In 1932 she met Odum, who dared her to fly alone after three weeks' practice. They were married in 1936.

Jacqueline Cochran's good luck in the Bendix race was not shared by others. Said Frank Fuller, second-place winner: "It was the stinkiest weather I've ever seen." Said Paul Mantz, who followed him: "The weather was awful. And to cap it all I hit a bird at 14,000 feet where no bird should be."

Two days later, Chicago's Roscoe Turner averaged 283.419 miles per hour over 30 laps of Cleveland's 10 mile course, winning the $45,000 Thompson trophy race. After flying an extra lap for luck, Turner landed, jumped out, threw his arms around his ship, cried: "Oh, you sweetheart!"

In 1867, a son named Patrick Joseph was born to Daniel and Mary Hayes in New York city. Orphaned, Patrick Hayes eventually became Patrick Cardinal Hayes, distinguished prelate, head of the richest Catholic archdiocese in the world. Seventy-one years after his birth, on a Sunday morning in Manhattan, devout Catholics attending 11 o'clock mass in St. Patrick's cathedral heard Reverend Henry F. Hammer speak: "I am about to make a most difficult announcement..."

I shall make it in very few words, because my heart is so filled with grief... Your archbishop, Cardinal Hayes, passed away in his sleep last night. Will you please pray for the repose of his soul."

The SALLY SMILE

MRS. PINNEY had called to see Miss Bowman, and the two women were in close conversation in Miss Bowman's private office. Miss Bowman was chief executive of the governing board of the hospital, and Mrs. Pinney was a director.

"Well, it simply has come to this," Miss Bowman said, wiping her eyeglasses nervously, "we'll have to close the hospital, if we can't get something to run it on. The citizens have done nobly—nobly, but they can't do everything. It remains for some moneyed person to come to the front now."

"Like Mrs. Chichester?" suggested Mrs. Pinney. Mrs. Pinney was a small, eager woman, who looked rather worn from the long-continued struggle of keeping the precious little hospital going on next to nothing a year.

"Yes! Mrs. Chichester. She is our richest citizen. She could give $50,000 and never feel it."

"But would she?"

"There's the question. I'm afraid she wouldn't. I've approached her unsuccessfully."

"So have I," moaned Mrs. Pinney. "Well, you can't force a person to give up her money, that's certain. I suppose it's hopeless."

"I don't know about that. I've been thinking I'd send Sally Drew to her and see what good that would do."

"Sally Drew!" Mrs. Pinney jumped. "She's the very one. I'll see her this afternoon."

Sally Drew was a tiny woman with hair like snowy wool and a pale pointed little face. Her eyes were wonderful, so bright, so black, so alive. They danced in her face. But her smile was more wonderful than her eyes.

The smile came now at sight of Mrs. Pinney.

"Julia!" she cried. "Come right in."

In Sally's small living room, so old-fashioned, so cozy, and withal so well suited to Sally herself, Julia Pinney told her story.

"Well, what do you want me to do?" Sally asked.

"I want you to go to Helen Chichester and get her to give us $5,000. That will keep the hospital running for one year. After that—but we'll hope."

Sally's smile vanished. She was silent an instant.

"I'll go, of course," she said quietly.

Mrs. Pinney arose. "Sally, you're a dear. If any one can do it you can. You are our last resort."

At 9, just as Mrs. Pinney was ready to fly to pieces with suspense, Sally walked in. The Sally smile was bright indeed.

"I couldn't get away sooner. Helen wouldn't let me come. You

A Costly Road

The Pulaski skyway is probably the most expensive road in the world for its length. The part of it that is raised is three miles long and cost $21,000,000. The approaches cost an additional $19,000,000. This roadway is 50 feet in width and can easily accommodate five lanes of traffic. It is estimated that 20,000,000 motor vehicles use it annually. It passes over both the Hackensack and the Passaic rivers and the New Jersey Meadows.

see, we haven't spoken before in thirty years—"

"What?" gasped Mrs. Pinney. "Thirty years," nodded Sally. "I did hate to go. But after I got there it was all right. Here's your money." She drew a check from her handbag and gave it to Mrs. Pinney. "Fifty thousand dollars," Mrs. Pinney could just articulate. "But we hoped your smile would do it."

"It did," Sally grew grave. "Thirty years ago Helen got the man I wanted. But no one ever knew it except her and me, for the day she was married I pinned on my smile and I've worn it ever since."

Herbert Chichester had only lived five years, but he had lived long enough to spoil the lives of two women. His wife had grown selfish and sore, but the woman she had won him from had "pinned on a smile" that had brightened a whole community.

Brave little Sally who had given away the secret of her life to help a good cause!

Sally was smiling the Sally smile—as usual.

WHO'S NEWS THIS WEEK

By LEMUEL F. PARTON

NEW YORK.—In Indianola, Iowa, the only member of the Mulligan family who stayed that way was Doc Mullican, the town dentist. One of his daughters married, and the four others became the Lane sisters of Hollywood. Had he lived a few months longer, the father would have witnessed the grand slam success of three of the girls, Priscilla, Rosemary and Lola, in the new film "Four Daughters." The home background of the Lane girls is such that it suggests Meg, Beth, Jo and Amy, these antecedents somehow easing into the picture, to the delight of the audience and the quite unrestrained enthusiasm of the critics. It is too bad that Leota couldn't have been the fourth daughter—this without disparagement of Gale Page, who gets a full share of honors. Leota is singing at the Metropolitan and is now studying at the Juilliard School of Music.

The only sources of excitement in Indianola, 21 miles south of Des Moines on the Rock Island, were the 3:15 train and the Methodist college. The Mullican girls, all musically gifted and all good looking, became locally famous for their home musicales and their party stunts.

Lola, eldest of the four, met Gus Edwards, away out on the kerosene circuit, 18 miles from Indianola. She persuaded him to give her a tryout. That led to vaudeville engagement, and later to Hollywood. It was Edwards who suggested her Lola Lane. Leota moved next, also in vaudeville, while Priscilla and Rosemary were still in school. But, at the ages of 14 and 18, respectively, the two latter rounded out the quartette in Hollywood, in "Varsity Show."

They have a grand house, showy cars, silks and sables and what-not—the Hollywood routine—but their public doesn't begrudge them their slice of the American dream, as long as they so faithfully portray its "Little Women" of poignant memory.

"Four Daughters," of modest production cost, was quietly unveiled without any fuss whatsoever. Critics headline it as a "sensational success." The lesson seems to be that the picture moguls, downhearted about the business and ready to spend until it hurts, are overlooking the pulling power of not necessarily expensive taste, simplicity, and sound dramatic craftsmanship, in lieu of a million dollars.

IF IT hasn't already happened, it is pretty nearly a certainty that someone will give Commodore Robert B. Irving, master of the Queen them almost constantly, and important occasions in his life are usually signalized by the ceremonious presentation of a B.B.B.—Best British Briar—which type of pipes features his collection of several hundred.

The tall, smiling, wind-and-sun-banned skipper is a border Scotsman of Kirtlebridge, Dunfreeshire, 41 years old, a sailing man for 47 years, 35 years with the Cunard line, bearing time out for war service. He is deliberate, friendly, chatty and easy-going, the last man in the world to pose for the portrait of a speed demon. Next to pipes, his hobby is collecting carvings of miniature elephants.

The son of a retired army colonel, he has no seafaring folk anywhere in his line, he went to sea at 12 on the school ship Conway, and, at 14, shipped on a four-master around the world to San Francisco. He joined the Cunard line as fourth officer. His first command was the Vennoia, and later he was master of many of the crack ships of the line, including the Lusitania, in 1914, and the Aquitania.

In his native Kirtlebridge, he lives in a house built in 1770, tramps through his 1,500 acres of copse and moors, works in his garden and raises spaniels. As one who has changed the world through nearly a century, he is happiest when he is at home, for there he is the kitted chief of the ancient Irving clan, and there his heart is.

"We Must Hang Together"

"We must hang together" is one of the famous puns in history and is attributed to Benjamin Franklin. When the Declaration of Independence was signed, John Hancock, president of the continental congress, put his name to the document first. "Now we must all hang together," he remarked as he wrote his name. "Yes, indeed," retorted Doctor Franklin, "we must all hang together or assuredly we shall hang separately."

Glitter...

"Keeping up with the Joneses" becomes a boomerang when we allow snobbery to distort our true sense of values.

By WINIFRED WILLARD

SISTER SUE was invited to be adviser to the rich couple furnishing their new home in New York. That's because she has good sense, eye for values and impeccable taste. The living room after it was blue-printed, lacked snap. It needed a dash of color. The interior decorator had brought as bait two red elephants, price $9. Mistress was charmed; said they were "so impressionistic, so intriguing."

Sister Sue thought they were shapeless, badly sized and off color. Next day Sister Sue said, "Why pay $9 when you can get a more stunning pair at Covington's for $6.50?" But "no," thought Mistress, "there couldn't be anything so beautiful as these particular red elephants."

A few days later, Sister Sue played a trump card with apparent unconcern. Very casually she said she "couldn't see the point in paying $9 for two red elephants that could be bought identical in every way at Lacy's for $1.49!" In the face of that disarming information, Mistress wilted. Of course she did not want for her new home what could be bought at Lacy's. She finally acknowledged that she had never quite liked those red elephants. It took a Sister Sue with brains and diplomacy to handle that bit of decorative difficulty.

The 'Million Dollar' Room

The walls of the million dollar room of the Union League club at Chicago are papered with certificates of stocks that were once said to be as good as gold. We believed the people who said they were. Maybe they believed themselves too! The only trouble was that the values just weren't there. We do the same things. We plaster our lives thick with standards of cost instead of worth.

We carry the same sort of standards as far as the schools we choose for our children. Tradition, price, social register, what the Joneses do, all weigh heavily with us instead of where our children will learn the most and become their best.

Over New York way is a family whose educational affections are rooted in one particular exclusive college. Costs $2,500 a year for daughter to go there. Just now that's too much. Family is very sorry for itself at the mere thought that it may have to consider another college to which their daughter may be obliged to go, where expenses are only $1,000. It doesn't seem to occur to family that this school is very high class; a topper in the educational world with faculty as good as the country affords, a great library, a century of associations and traditions, good enough for any blue-blood; a beautiful campus more than a hundred years old! But it costs less. That is the only thing against it. Thereby family concludes that it has to be worth less. Strange that after all our lessons we can't learn to tell gold from glitter.

A Social Killing

A man was buying his wife a wondrous ruby ring. Its color and cutting and setting were perfect. Anything lovelier couldn't be imagined. Much personal and foolish importance was attached to the purchase. The merchant said its price was $3,000. They flipped the money from their purses as if it were a farthing and said to each other so clearly that the merchant heard, clearly that they were sorry; they had hoped that it would cost $5,000. It would be so much bigger a story to tell! And they intended that ring to help them make a social "killing."

They remind me of the man who went to market to buy a big pipe organ, one with chimes and harps and all the modern gadgets. He did not know anything about organs: only something about dollars. This one had a big front and cost a lot of money, many thousands. It was exceedingly short on performance. Another instrument with half the window display at much less than half the cost had real musical merit, had what an organ ought to have it, had melody and harmony, sweetness—melody and variety of tone. But richness and variety of tone. But the man who went to market to buy an organ paid the big price for the poor product. It made such a good story to tell. See how much it cost! story to tell. See how much it cost!

Most of us are like that! We purchase a sensible little string of beads as a gift to some graduating girl. Then we scour around until we find a Tiffany box in which to send it. We buy some perfectly good ten cent store candy for the week end or as an informal, friendly courtesy. But when we share it with others, if we are clever enough, our candy gets placed in a blue-blood box with a famous trade name which somehow we think takes off the ten cent curse. We can't just seem because we judge help it apparently because we judge so frequently by other standards than downright values.

Really it is the same thing with infinite variations as Mistress' two red elephants, highly desirable $9 impossible at $1.49.

Braid Trimming Is Smart

IT'S so easy to sew a few rows of braid onto a house dress or a little girl's panty-frock, and it's such a smart way to brighten up simple fashions and make them more becoming. Here are two attractive and unusual designs that you'll enjoy making at home, in pretty fabrics of your own selection. Each includes a detailed sew chart to guide beginners.

The House Dress.

Here's a style so becoming and attractive that you'll probably want to make it of thin wool or sports silk for general wear, as well as of percale, calico, gingham for the house. The very short kimono sleeves are just as easy to work in as no sleeves, and much more becoming. Straight panels front and back, gathers at the sides of the waistline only, give this design an unusually good figure line.

The Panty-Frock.

High waistline; puff sleeves, square necklines—they all look adorable on little girls. This flaring frock buttons down the front so that ambitious tots can easily dress themselves in it. This design will be pretty in so many different materials—gingham, challis, percale and dimity. A dress-up version in taffeta will be sweet, too; trim that with ribbon instead of the braid.

1570 is designed for sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46 and 48. Size 36 requires 4½ yards of 35-inch material without nap; 2¾ yards braid to trim.

1516 is designed for sizes 2, 4, 6 and 8 years. Size 4 requires 3 yards of 35-inch material; 4½ yards braid or ribbon to trim; 1½ yards ribbon for belt.

Fall and Winter Fashion Book.

The new 32-page Fall and Winter Pattern Book which shows photographs of the dresses being worn is now out. (One pattern and the Fall and Winter Pattern Book—25 cents.) You can order the book separately for 15 cents.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!

Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel tired, nervous, all worn out.

Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.

The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Inset on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

Here's good advice for a woman during her change (usually from 38 to 52), who fears she'll lose her appeal to men, who worries about hot flashes, loss of pep, dizzy spells, upset nerves and moody spells.

It helps Nature build up physical resistance, thus helps give more vivacity to enjoy life and assist calming jittery nerves and disturbing symptoms that often accompany change of life. Ink Spots And Spatters

By Jergie

Editor Earl Hall of the Mason City Globe-Gazette, of Mason City, the speaker at the Civic Club meeting held last Thursday night, made his appearance in Klemme surrounded by his body-guard, Fred Schaeffer, Dr. Kunz and Senator Earl Dean... in other words, the Rusty Hinge Quartet.

Earl has enlarged his field whereon to cast his "dirty" remarks, and besides this scribe and "Hank" Galbreth, he also roped "Bill" Keraus into the fold... chiefly because of Bill's lack of hair on the upper strata.

The scribe and Bill thoroughly enjoyed the lashing that Hank Galbreth put across on Hall when he told of the confusion of the voters in Cerro Gordo who thought it was a new Globe-Gazette building they were voting on instead of the Court House. Asked why, one fellow remarked: (according to Hank) that a newspaper plant was needed for several reasons, among which were that the columns supporting it were too narrow, that the Hall in the editorial room was "too wide" and after all it was only a paper building. And was Earl's face red?

And to add insult to injury Hank kept right on frying Hall by giving a glowing talk on how wonderful a way he was putting over Safety in Iowa, and that his Klemme friends (?) at this time would pay tribute and honor to Mr. Hall by presenting him with a suitable emblem. Earl stepped to the stage and Hank pinned on his noble breast... a horse blanket SAFETY pin... and this scribe's great, great, great-grandfather was not a horse thief... but he was a neighbor to Earl's great, great, great-grandfather (and stories are bound to get twisted in handing them down through the ages) and the way we hear it is that Earl's G. G. G-father was killed when he fell from a tree... but the rope held!

I-S-A-S

But the Rusty Hinges put on one of the best programs ever heard in Klemme... it's just too bad that all who were invited to the banquet failed to come, as they surely missed a wonderful time.

I-S-A-S

Not That wasn't a fire out in Albert Barz' cornfield Monday morning. It was just the fire department experimenting with the new truck and they pumped the water out of the basement at Smock's house and were spraying Albert's corn field until... well ask "Oofie" Lau!

I-S-A-S

Again we want to say "Drive carefully, walk carefully, and avoid accidents on our streets."

I-S-A-S

Now that we have voted for a new school house, the school board has sold the bonds and have selected the site... what is there for us to crab about? It reminds me of a hound-dog barking at the moon... he makes a lot of noise and thinks he is putting something across... but his howling dies out into an echo!

He put a proposition before the assembly if the school can sell a hundred dollars worth of magazines, he will give them a 40 to 50 per cent discount on an electric score board for use in athletic contests. The students agreed to the proposition, and the sale of the magazines started immediately and is progressing quite rapidly. The students are divided into two sides. LaRayne Stille heads one group and Harold Wicks the other. The contest closed Tuesday, Sept. 20th.

Luxurious Tailored Suits Take Lead in Fall Styles

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

ING the luxurious three-piece suits and costume suits, as the may be, fashioned as they are with rich autumnal colorings, this season's suits is the fact that they are softly tailored with subtle feminine touches that have in them no suggestion of stereotyped severe "lines."

There are many intriguing trimming touches such as bindings of stitched velveteen finishing the edges of gay plaids or leather may be used instead of the velveteen. Then, too, suede and wool fabric often form an alliance. In every event color is played up to capacity.

Consider the very charming three-piece suit to the left in the picture. Here is a glowing example of the effective use designers are making of color. Plum-colored imported tweed having a light blue crossed bar is employed for the making of this smart three-piece. The skirt and the piping on the short jacket are of the plum tweed in monotone. The hat is of matching plum suede with stitched brim. Here is a grand chance to wear light blue accessories and a blouse in blue would offer a pleasing change.

To the right, tweed in a mixture of reddish brown and dark blue is used for the whole outfit. A beaver collar is on the jacket. Hat, bag, gloves and shoes are in reddish brown. This is a three-piece that tuns to weather changes perfectly because of the protective cape that may be worn or not at will.

Speaking of capes, considerable emphasis is being placed on cloth evening wraps and the circular cape of fine broadcloth that extends midway between waist and knees (an inspiration of the nineties) is a favorite. Quaint looking indeed but tres chic just the same.

Interest in smooth face velvety surfaced woollens is being revived. Broadcloth, suedes, zibelines, duvety types have come into their own this season due to the acceptance of old-fashioned styles given new-fashioned interpretation.

Sleeved Coat

Dirndl Is Leader Among Juveniles

The dirndl may be dwindling in popularity with the grown-up fashion leaders but it continues to hold first place in juvenile styles for the coming season. Many coats as well as dresses designed for little girls from three to six years old show the peasant influence.

One coat that is typical of the trend is made of royal blue velveteen and has a fitted basque top to which is attached a very full shirred skirt section. A little collar of gray squirrel fastens snugly at the throat. Another coat similarly styled is made of wine red wool velour and has cordings of the fabric trimming the dirndl skirt.

Leather Hats Are New Fall Fashion

Leather hats have come to town as spice for the fashion menu.

"Lily Dache makes them of kid and suede in such colors as elephant gray, rural autumn (a rich maple leaf red) dawn blue (green blue) and beet root (a deep dark red) as well as the regulation shades trimmed with bright colors. She sends them out with gloves of the same color to wear now with dark frocks and later with fall suits.

New Fall Color
"Tabac" brown, more mellow in its tone than most browns, is off to a good start in the early collections. Maggy Rouff combines it with maroon and deep sage green to make a "mosaic" winter coat formed by pieced-together squares of the three colors.

Star Dust

- ★ Sing You Sinners
- ★ Langdon's Return
- ★ Allen's a Cop

By Virginia Vale

AT LAST Bing Crosby has made an outstandingly good picture. Apparently Paramount should have found out long ago that it's a good idea to hitch a man's job to his hobby; that's what happened in "Sing You Sinners," for Bing plays a young man who makes his fortune, accidentally, in horse racing.

The picture is uproariously funny, and has two good songs. It also has an excellent cast, including Elizabeth Patterson and Fred MacMurray. Incidentally, it looks as if the character Bing plays, "Joe Beebe," might be part of a new cycle, so far as heroes are concerned. "Joe" is a ne'er-do-well, that kind of young man who, in real life, is so badly adjusted to life that he's just all wrong.

And along comes "Four Daughters," a grand picture in which John Garfield plays "Mickey Borden," another young man who's off on the wrong foot. "Mickey" is bitter and reckless and rude, and Garfield plays him magnificently. And that is no easy trick, for Priscilla Lane is very good indeed, and young Mr. Garfield has plenty of competition from May Robson, Frank McHugh and Claude Rains.

John Carradine, an excellent actor, turns in such a swell performance in a bit part in "Alexander's Ragtime Band" that he deserves bigger and better roles and many of them. He had hung up a record for himself on the stage before he took to the movies, and if he doesn't grab stellar honors in movies soon it's going to be because the producers can't recognize real talent.

Current news of George Raft's squabble with Paramount—Lloyd Nolan will be seen opposite Dorothy Lamour in Raft's role in "St. Louis Blues." Other changes: Harry Langdon's chance for a come-back as a partner for Hardy of the team of Laurel and Hardy, as a result of Stan Laurel's suspension by the studio, and Dorothy Lamour's departure from her role in radio as one of Charlie McCarthy's co-stars.

Speaking of radio, Kay Kayser and his band are going on tour, and the man whose cry of "Students!" has become so popular a part of modern dialogue will be doing his broadcasting from a lot of places, including a couple of universities (Pittsburgh and Pennsylvania) before he returns to New York. Kayser's rise to fame has been speedy; it's not so long since he was a college student himself.

When Fred Allen returns to the air it's pretty certain that he'll write two characters for himself into two of his scripts—an honorary policeman and a judge of a marathon race. The reason being that he's been appointed a policeman and a judge this summer in Old Orchard, Maine, and he's as proud of his honors as the late Will Rogers used to be over his job as mayor of Beverly Hills, Calif.

Fred Allen

to be over his job as mayor of Beverly Hills, Calif.

ODDS AND ENDS—There's a new trend in pictures at the moment. Central Casting bureau gets call after call from the studios for extras under 35 years old. Pretty hard on the old-timers who are supporting themselves by work as extras. Janet Gaynor has a favorite story, "Forever," the rights of which she owns, she'll probably make it as her first picture under the new Selznick "share the profits" plan. Three characters have been written out of "The Cowboy and the Lady" since it went into production, and three players dropped, all for the sake of economy—the picture got to costing too much. The three who got the ax are Benita Hume, Thomas Mitchell and David Niven. They're still laughing at Claudette Colbert's reason for not working in "Spahn of the North"—"to the effect that she 'wouldn't star with a fish.'"

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Offers Timely Advice On Avoiding the Menace of Tooth Decay

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

ONE of the most serious indictments against our present-day civilization is its failure to preserve the teeth of men, women and children. Countless examinations in all parts of the country reveal that practically 100 per cent of the adult population is afflicted with some form of oral disease. And surveys of the physical condition of school pupils in different localities and under various circumstances disclose that tooth decay affects between 90 and 97 per cent of our school children.

Remarkable and widely heralded advances have been made in our knowledge of how to control and prevent many dangerous and debilitating diseases. Yet we appear to be complacent in the face of the fact that the majority of our population is handicapped by decayed teeth!

Nor does the mere statement of the case convey any idea of the seriousness of the situation. For it is unfortunate that diseased teeth and dental infections which may result from unchecked decay, seldom incapacitate the sufferer. Thus the victim does not become sufficiently alarmed to take the steps necessary to arrest the progress of the diseased condition.

Yet a single decayed tooth might be compared to a poison factory, distributing its noxious products to every part of the body, and tooth decay may be indirectly responsible for rheumatic ailments, neuritis, dyspepsia or duodenal ulcers. It may be a contributing cause of heart trouble.

Possibilities of Prevention

Yet there is little or no excuse for the appalling amount of dental decay that afflicts the American people. For in recent years a vast amount of laboratory and clinical research has been undertaken in this field and there is impressive evidence that dental caries, or decay, may be completely controlled by dietary means. Then, too, our understanding of correct dental hygiene has advanced tremendously, and scientifically designed tooth brushes and skillfully compounded dentifrices are available in every town and hamlet throughout the country.

Diet and Dental Disease

Various investigators have advocated different dietary formulas for the control of dental decay. There is a lack of agreement among them as to which single element is the most important in constructing a diet to prevent caries.

But outstanding authorities hold that each of the five following dietary factors has a controlling influence: vitamins A, C and D; an adequate supply, in the correct proportions, of the minerals, calcium and phosphorus; an excess of alkaline or base-forming foods over acid-forming foods; and a generous allowance of raw foods, with emphasis on those that leave an alkaline ash.

Vitamin A and Tooth Structure

Notable research has demonstrated that vitamin A is a definite factor in controlling tooth development. The development of the enamel is governed by a complex structure which begins to deteriorate as soon as vitamin A is withheld. When experimental animals are placed on a diet lacking in this vitamin, their teeth become brittle, chalky and white. This is due to the loss of the enamel, and the exposure of the dentine.

An English authority also claims that vitamin A is necessary to help prevent diseases of the gums.

Inasmuch as vitamin A likewise has many other important functions to perform in the body, every homemaker should see to it that her meals contain an abundance of milk and other dairy products, and the green, leafy and yellow vegetables which are a good source of this vitamin.

Vitamin C and Tooth Health

Vitamin C is closely associated with the health of both teeth and gums. There is strong evidence that this vitamin is essential to the dentine, enamel, cementum and the bone of the jaw. And there are on record remarkable experiments which demonstrate that dental decay and gum disorders are both prevented and arrested when extra amounts of foods containing vitamin C are included in a well-balanced diet.

Vitamin C is best obtained from the citrus fruits, tomatoes and raw leafy vegetables such as cabbage.

Vitamin D which we get from the sun, from fish-liver oils and concentrates, and from irradiated foods and those fortified with vitamin D concentrate, is necessary for the proper utilization of the calcium and phosphorus, which must be generously supplied if the teeth are to develop properly.

Importance of Dental Hygiene

Thus a carefully calculated diet, beginning before birth and continuing throughout life, is necessary to build teeth that are structurally sound. But even the most perfect teeth require constant care to maintain their soundness.

Thorough brushing is necessary after every meal to remove all particles of food which remain between the crevices and cling near the necks of the teeth. If not removed, this debris may ferment, giving rise to unpleasant odors and creating acids which may attack the tooth enamel.

It is important, however, that the brushing be done correctly, away from the gums and with a slight rolling stroke, so that the bristles can penetrate between the teeth. Never use a horizontal stroke nor brush toward the gums. This may irritate the tender tissues and may also force food particles under the gums at the necks of the teeth.

A Good Dentifrice Essential

The selection of a dentifrice is most important because an agreeable dentifrice encourages thorough brushing—an efficient dentifrice helps to float away minute bits of food not reached by the toothbrush.

It is also advisable to use a paste or powder which helps to restore luster to teeth which have been surface-stained by foods and beverages.

The use of an antiseptic mouthwash, at least once daily, especially before retiring, is commendable as it leaves the mouth fresh and clean.

It is also important to give the teeth regular systematic cleansing, and to see your dentist periodically for a careful checkup.

WRONG? Well, yes—and no. The arithmetic of your school days taught that if "Mary had five dollars and spent two..." three dollars remained. But that is mathematics—not shopping!

In managing a home... guarding a limited family income... we've simply got to do better than Mary did. We must sharpen our buying wits... ascertain where the dollars of extra value lurk... take five dollars to town and get much more for the money spent.

Fortunately, there are ever-willing guides right at hand—the advertisements in this newspaper. Advertised merchandise is often exceptional value merchandise. It makes dollars S-T-R-E-T-C-H.

YOUNG PHEASANTS DIS- TRIBUTED HERE BY GAME WARDEN JACK STEVENS

Deputy Warden Jack Stevens, of Clear Lake, was in the Klemme vicinity Friday evening to distribute several crates of young pheasants on farms here.

At the Henry Ward farm southeast of Klemme thirty young pheasants were turned loose. Five other crates of thirty were to be released in this territory.

Farms where the young birds have been liberated will be closed to hunters during the open pheasant season.

Chief purpose of distributing these birds in various sections is to inject new blood for more hardy birds. As a result of inbreeding birds have become weak and un-thrifty.

The birds bear leg bands and in event any are shot or found dead the bands are to be removed and sent to the Iowa State conservation commission.

 ed States was established at Litchfield, Conn., in 1784.

Funeral Services Held For Mrs. August Lau

NEER WOMAN DIED HERE FRIDAY EVENING, SEPT. TWENTY-THIRD

Services Held At Methodist Church With Dr. Wm. Zabilka Officiating

Mrs. Anna Lau, 80 years of age, of the late August Lau, prominent Klemme business man, passed away at her home in Klemme, Friday evening, September 23.

Funeral services were held from the Klemme Methodist Church on Friday afternoon, with Dr. Wm. Zabilka officiating.

Obituary

Mrs. Anna Lau was born on January 28, 1858, in Clayton county, Iowa. She died at her home in Klemme, Friday afternoon, September 23, at the age of 80 years, 9 months and 17 days. The cause of death was given as apoplexy.

Her advanced age was against her, and death came suddenly, but she met it calmly. She was the second of a family of children born to her parents, and Mrs. Heinrich Boehm. They were natives of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, Germany, until they moved to Clayton county, and were members of the Lutheran Church. Mrs. Lau was a member of this church until she came to Klemme county in the year 1879.

She joined her husband as a member of the Methodist Church in Liberty township. She was the widow of the late August Carl Lau, whom she married March 28, 1876, in Clayton county, Iowa. She lived on a farm before they moved from Clayton county to a farm in Liberty township, Hancock county, Iowa, in 1879, or 59 years ago.

In 1896 she and her husband moved to Klemme and she has lived there for the past 42 years. She was a mother to all who knew her, and there were no exceptions. This was her greatest gift, and her greatest prize was her children for which she would sacrifice her last reserve.

Beautiful plants and flowers were always to be seen in her home garden. Her husband, August Carl Lau, died her in death 14 years ago. Mrs. Lau was the mother of 9 children, 5 sons and 4 daughters. She is survived by 1 son and 1 daughter predeceased in death. She leaves of her immediate family—seven children: Henry C. Lau, Tracy, Minn.; F. Lau, Albert Lea, Minn.; Wesley Schultdt, August G. Benjamin R. Lau, Mrs. Fred and Minnie Lau, all of Klemme—16 grand children—10 grand children—2 sisters, Fred Musfeldt, Clarion, Iowa; Mary Waterman, Klemme, and brother, Henry Boehm, Klemme, Iowa.

Funeral services were held from the Methodist Church in Klemme, Monday, September 26, 1938, with Rev. Wm. Zabilka officiating. Burial was made in Calvary cemetery, Klemme, on the family lot beside her husband.

We bid farewell to a mother who helped to build up this community from the stage of its infancy.

War Comes Again to the Historic "Bluegrass Country" of Kentucky

Only a Theoretical Conflict Between Two Imaginary Forces to Train 500 Officers of the Second Army Area in Use of Latest Developments of Science and Invention and Fit Them for Leadership in Modern "Stream-Lined" War.

© Western Newspaper Union.

One of the army's modern "flying fortresses."

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WAR has come again to the historic Bluegrass country of Kentucky!

But it's vastly different from the kind of war that was there when Daniel Boone and Simon Kenton and their patriots strove mightily to wrest the "Dark and Bloody" from the Indians. And it's different, too, from the war they waged 75 years ago when Kentucky was overrun by forces of both the North and the South in the War Between States.

In this war, that they're fighting down around Fort Campbell this week and next, is a "stream-lined" affair, utilizing the very latest methods of communication and transportation. Another difference, this is a theoretical or imaginary war that's being fought in the minds of 500 officers of the regular army, the guard and organreserves. It's about when a powerful mythical "Black" army on the shores of the Gulf of Mexico and marched north to the nation's "breadbasket" rich agricultural region of the Ohio river—and the industrial and manufacturing centers around the Lakes. To repel this inland drive back or destroy it was the job of an mythical "Blue" army, commanded by the Second Army United States, command-Maj-Gen Hugh A. Drum, headquarters in Chicago.

Of the seven states of the Army area, which include both the Fifth and Sixth areas, are represented in "The Fifth Corps area" the states of Indiana, Kentucky and West Virginia. The Sixth Corps area, Michigan and Wisconsin. The "Blue" army, which Maj-Gen Drum is leading against the "Black" army, is composed of the guard and organized reof those states as well as army troops. "War" in which they are called, in army parlance, "CPX." Translated into terms, that means "Com-mo Exercise." It's quite different from the usual field exercises. That calls for the training of thousands of men which is not only very expensive but also interferes to a great extent with the ordinary lives of civilians in the areas where such war games are CPX is a system of field training in which marching, supplies and equipment are sent only in theory. Pres-functioning in actual field headquarters of each military unit involved and in these quarters are the commanders and their staffs and communications.

Present "war" in Kentucky field maneuvers, all 740 officers, 112,596 non-commissioned men and 320 of the Second Army area are concentrated in the Blue region. But since it's only the 500 officers of these units and approximately 2,000 men, to handle the communications and other details of the operations, are "However, these officers are given all the detailed plans necessary to conceivably and engage in battle with the "Blue" army's 120,000 officers and men if they were actually in relied over facsimile telegraph machines which not only save time but insure accuracy. This is in striking contrast to old-time methods when it sometimes took as long as 48 hours to transmit orders from army, corps and division headquarters to front line units.

Matching the use of modern means of communication will be the employment of modern methods of transportation, for the "CPX" will take into account the existence of concrete highways over which troops and supplies can be rushed in high-speed trucks. Loads of trucks will be dumped, theoretically, in order to rush troops forward—and that includes not only infantry but cavalry, as well!

This "war" will also show the value of the new "iron horse," since the mechanized Seventh Cavalry brigade will play an important role in it. And what a contrast that will be to the old days—when these huge armored machines go rumbling and clanking over the roads along which once galloped Gen. John Hunt Morgan and his dashing Confederate troopers.

army in fighting this "war" is making use of precise high-speed office machinery and communication methods, incorporating ideas and systems developed for speeding peace-time big business operations. In preparation for the communication needs of the defending army, three carloads of wire, switchboards, radio sets and other signal material were sent to the scene of operations. A total of 425 telephones were installed in the various headquarters and eight miles of wire strung. With 68 radio operators on the job to handle the wireless traffic, operation commanders and their staffs will be able to set new records in the transmission of orders.

Using the teletype, army headquarters will be able to make its decisions known to subordinate commanders immediately. Overlays giving the accurate positions of front line units will be quickly

An armored combat car fires its 30-caliber anti-aircraft gun at an "enemy" plane.

One of the main purposes of the war game now being played in Kentucky is to familiarize the officers taking part in it with all the marked advances in the mechanical implements of war which have come about since the great conflict of 1914-18 and which will have striking influences on the conduct of battle in the future. Among them are these developments:

Aviation's spectacular advance, especially in reliability, range, speed, load, destructiveness and service of information.

Armor-clad cross-country combat vehicles—mechanized forces. Motorization and expansive road systems for movement of large masses.

Anti-aircraft artillery, with greatly improved accuracy and range and means of airplane detection.

An artillery with increased mobility, destructive power, range and applied to all weapons from anti-tank guns to railway artillery. Country weapons with increased penetration, rapidity of fire, range and accuracy.

Chemicals with more efficient propellant instruments as well as more effective defense facilities.

Communications, covering a broad field such as radio with voice, facsimile and television transmission and electrical reproduction instruments, keeping pace with the speed and range of the other advances.

Not only will the officers who engage in this "war" be carrying it on with "streamlined" implements of battle, but they will also be called upon to do some "streamlined" thinking as well. General Drum made that clear in an address which he delivered before the officers at the beginning of the "CPX."

"Speed of action as a corollary to our modern weapons and transportation will involve mental processes as well as physical movements," he declared. "The full value of these modern implements can not be taken advantage of unless our mental processes are stepped up in harmony therewith—our minds are flexible and supple. We must develop the faculties of quickly sizing up a situation, grasping opportunities, making quick decisions and utilizing the modern communications for transmitting these to the troops in brief intelligent instructions."

"The acme of efficiency in combat springs from the soul of an army—its esprit de corps—that fraternal comradeship which inspires individual and group confidence, determination and the mutual respect and affection which engender the spirit of willing sacrifice for the success of the whole. The development of these qualities in the leaders insures similar traits in the lower ranks."

"As our army and its corps assemble as units in peace once in several years, the value and inculcation of these human qualities should receive close attention in our field exercises. Let us endeavor to think, plan and act in the spirit of the Second Army, the Fifth, Sixth and Cavalry corps, and the GHQ Air wing, and knit ourselves into the combat teams these great fighting units represent."

"While we live in a machine age—militarily as well as commercially, let us not forget that success in battle in the final analysis is secured by man. His desire to become efficient—his willingness to meet hardships and to make the supreme sacrifice, are inspired by his respect and affection for and confidence in his leaders. The personality of the leader is a vital factor. Who ever heard of the numerical designation of Civil War units? It was Hancock's Long-street's or Jackson's corps. Success in battle will seldom be secured except through personal leadership—so in this machine age, we must guard against the danger of the mechanical element dominating the human side."

PRICE OF PERFECTION . . .

If being "tops" in your line cost you nothing, it would be worth just that much to you!

By WINIFRED WILLARD

WE CAME at twilight to a home-like town among the hills of Maryland. There we would stop for the night. I shopped for rooms—something comfortable at modest cost. At the best looking hotel, the dapper young clerk quoted rates that would have knocked my depression purse silly. I told him so. He replied, "Well, you get just what you pay for!" It's true.

There was that symphony orchestra which we heard through the season where 60 men played as one. No out-of-time or out-of-tune or out-of-balance. Just glorious, classic music. It looked so easy, all grace and beauty and harmony. Every note was just right. But every player there had paid hours a day, year after year of grilling work, for the power to have his part in that ensemble. The flutist, they say is premier of all in the world. He played the very heart out of us with his eerie, almost divine melodies. It seemed so simple. He is paying through all the years, the price of his continued mastery. That is what makes it so worthwhile.

If excelling cost these musicians nothing, it would be worth nothing to them. If being a topper in your line cost you nothing, it would be worth just that much to you!

Fritz Kreisler's Price

With his violin Kreisler had completed a mighty aria. Silence of utter tribute followed. Then an impulsive woman rushed up to him and exclaimed: "Oh, Mr. Kreisler, I'd give half my life to be able to play as you do!" With quiet dignity the great musician replied: "Madam, that is the very price I have paid." Not even he got his mastery except for the price.

A popular theater, full one night in Washington, was mystified and challenged by the magic that was Houdini's. We knew there must be mirrors and many tricky devices. We tried to discover them. And couldn't. As we watched his performance, the wonder of it and the marvel of him remained.

How did he do those breath-taking feats that permitted him to rank all others in his line in the world? He did them by paying their price! Not his price. But whatever the cost of doing them better than anybody else had ever done them, he paid it. He began paying when he was a boy. Steadily through the years he recognized the high cost of the skill he was set on earning. Not a finger nor a toe must bungle or fail or slip. Hard to do!

So, year after year, as Houdini talked or read or thought, those 20 agile partners were ceaselessly at work, tying and untying difficult knots and other intricate, puzzling things. Eternally at it, with all the body and mind of him! Houdini couldn't afford to fail. He paid the high price of supreme achievement. He got what he wanted.

Paderewski's Discipline

The greatest pianist of the ages is Paderewski, son of Poland, citizen of the world. We incline to think of him as a special favorite of the gods, so endowed above the earthly. Doubtless so! But the gods would have failed him unless he had done his part. He, too, must keep on paying the price. When he lapses his musical discipline one day, he sees the difference; two days and those close to him detect the lack; a week and the world is somehow conscious of the let-down of his brilliant technique. So, traveling over mountain or plain or sea, he carries a keyboard of standard piano size and action. Hour after hour as he journeys, he sits at this keyboard and pays the price of his artistry.

Few of us were designed for such outstanding front ranks as these. Mostly we have modest places in the work we must do for the world. The same law prevails. We excel or hold our own only by continually paying. A successful young salesman was telling what a "rotten canvass" he had made the day before, how he stumbled over his story and what a poor impression he had made on the man he was trying to sell. His clear-cut explanation was that he had been doing other things for a week, hadn't worked at his job and had again to pay the price of getting back to where he was master of his situation.

I did not engage the two costly rooms at the swanky hotel in the quaint little town among the hills. But I have been glad that I shopped there and grateful to the young clerk. His vivid reply which at the time seemed intended to put me where I belonged, has sent me exploring along many roads in the realm of life and of living—you get just what you pay for.

Smart Fall Styles That Are Flattering

HERE are two charming fashions with the crisp, slim-waisted, very feminine look that proves they are new and smart! And you'll notice that the sleeves are proudly puffed up, not out—they give height, not width, to the shoulders. These two simple designs, each accompanied by a detailed sew chart, make it very, very easy for you to have two leading fashions of the coming season at very little cost.

Two-Piecer With Jacket Blouse.

This charming fashion is extremely good this fall. It's tailored or dressy, according to the materials in which you make it up. The skirt is slim and plain. The jacket-blouse as youthful and becoming as it can be. For street, make it of wool crepe, flannel or faille. For afternoon, choose velvet or broadcloth for the skirt; satin, velvet or silver cloth for the jacket blouse.

With Smart, Slenderizing Lines.

Notice that the front panel of the skirt is cut in one with the midriff section—that's a smart detail that you see in expensive models, and it's excellent for large women. You can trust the suave, slick lines of this dress to make you look several pounds slimmer. It fits beautifully. Shoulder darts, and gathers above the waistline, ease it over the bust, without any hint of bulkiness. Make this of satin, silk crepe, velvet or sheer wool, and you'll like it better than any dress you've had for a long time.

The Patterns.

1477 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40 and 42. Size 16 requires 2 yards of 39-inch material for the jacket-blouse; 2 yards for the skirt.

1585 is designed for sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48, 50 and 52. Size 38 requires 5 1/2 yards of 39 inch material for long-sleeved dress; 4 1/2 yards for short-sleeved.

Fall and Winter Fashion Book.

The new 32-page Fall and Winter Pattern Book which shows photographs of the dresses being worn is now out. (One pattern and the Fall and Winter Pattern Book—25 cents.) You can order the book separately for 15 cents.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

The best days of the year are now here, at least so thinks this scribe. Crisp, cool mornings, bright, sunny days, with an occasional fall rain. It's a big red letter day too on the sportsman's calendar. . . . best fishing of the year, open season on squirrels and bunnies, duck shooting just around the corner, an open season on pheasants ahead. . . . what more could a person want?

And the nature lover finds plenty to marvel about. Beautiful colorings appearing in the oaks and basswoods. . . . colors that turn brighter with the first touch of frost. Autumn flowers are now at their best. The hardy birds are arriving from the north and a straggling flock of ducks is occasionally seen in the evening heading for a pond after a day's feast in friend farmer's cornfield.

Then there is the other side. . . . the approach of winter. . . . cold days and long nights. . . . coal to pay for, more electricity to pay for, snow to shovel, the old car must soon be "winterized" and high drifts of snow mean hard work ahead.

I-S-A-S

A sad reminder: Your taxes were due on September 1st and become delinquent on October 1st. If you have not already done so, better pay today and save the penalty.

I-S-A-S

In case you don't know or didn't see the signs. . . . the speed limit the entire length of Main Street in Klemme is 20 miles per hour. Drive carefully and walk carefully. Drivers and pedestrians can co-operate to prevent accidents.

And. . . there are several streets in Klemme in need of gravel. Exceed the twenty mile limit and you may be required to "donate" toward the gravelling fund!

I-S-A-S

It's just too bad that a few of our people seem to lack confidence in the ability of the men on our school board to select a proper site for the new school building. Petitions are unnecessary to help them solve the problem. The law provides that a public hearing must be called at which time objections may be heard. The hearing for the Klemme building project will be held next Monday night. At that time citizens of Klemme will be given the right to appear and voice their objections.

I-S-A-S

Looks like its "back to the good old horse and buggy days." This scribe has noted several farmers the past week hauling lumber, tile, and other buiding materials from town, using a wagon and a pair of Dobbins.

Something quite unusual in the Dobbins line was seen in Klemme, Tuesday, when Ned Howard drove to town and took out a load of cement. Ned was driving a team of twin mares, believe it or not. His father, Elmer Howard, likewise was driving a team and wagon and had a big load of lumber.

And then we have seen Milvern Barz in town with a team and wagon hauling tile out to his father's farm, the Albert Barz place.

There's nothing like a fine team of Dobbins hitched to a good wagon to haul materials to the farm. Dobbins don't need any gas nor do his valves ever need grinding. More power to him!

We have been reading Indian poems and stories. A few of us brought sacks to make our Indian tepee.

We have decided to have a room newspaper. Our editor is Clarence Larsen. Our reporters are Donna Heivilin, Phyllis Christiance and Dean Jacobs. We have not chosen the name yet. We shall choose it this week.

Delores Kaduce had a birthday Thursday. She was nine years old. She brought treats to school.

GRADES 5 & 6

Mavis Meyers and Junior Buntenbach—reporters

In the morning for opening exercises we say the Lord's Prayer and then the flag salute.

We each made a little book for our reading chart. Miss Irvine made the chart and pasted them on.

The fifth graders measured their height and weight in health class. We are going to see how much we grow and gain in weight during the year.

Miss Irvine is reading a story, "Becky Byran's Secret," to us. Patricia Kudje brought the book.

We are carving things out of soap in art class.

We had two fire drills this week. The ball cops are wearing their white belts again.

Daard brought some plants to school.

GRADES 7 & 8

Elwyn Jacobs and Eunice Larsen—reporters

Tuesday we had our first fire drill this year. During penmanship class we also chose the best writer in our room. Betty Etchen was chosen. Several members were gone from the class because of band practice.

Wednesday afternoon we hiked to Johnson's Hill. We observed many interesting things. Eunice Larsen wrote the best report about the hike.

Corrine Merkel brought a Christmas cactus to school. Ellen Kilgore returned a plant that was in our room last year.

Betty Jean Etchen has been playing the pinao for our music class.

Eunice Larsen, Phyllis Klotzbach, Freda Kaduce, Barbara Johnson, Caroline Schwartz and Betty Jean Etchen received one hundred per cent in spelling this week.

Standard Bearers Held Meeting

The Standard Bearer Girls held their September meeting at the church with eighteen present. The meeting opened with a song fest, followed by election of officers. Then Maxine Stokesbary led the candle lighting ceremony with Mrs. Elder giving the devotions. Elsie Ward and Ruth Stille presented a very interesting lesson to close the meeting.

WIFE OF FORMER KLEMM PASTOR DIES FOLLOWING AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT

Mrs. H. A. Achtermann died at the Hampton Hospital, Monday night, following an auto accident in which she was critically injured near Latimer, Friday.

Mrs. Achtermann, who was the wife of Rev. H. A. Achtermann, former pastor of the Klemme Reformed Church, lived with her husband at Bristow, where he is pastor.

From reports Rev. and Mrs. Achtermann were driving on a country road when their car was involved in a collision at an intersection. Rev. Achtermann was also injured.

USE A DOG

Conservation authorities urge hunters to use a retriever in their hunting activities this year. The use of hunting dogs will save a large amount of game by making it possible for the hunters to retrieve lost and crippled birds. It is estimated that upwards of 30 per cent of ducks and pheasants are lost. If this number could be counted in on the bag limit, the number of birds destroyed would be lowered. Use a retriever.

WE NOW HAVE THE NEW CRIB WITH THE METAL SILO TOP!

Stop and take a look at it, and if you want one, two or three, place your order. The manufacturer says that the officials have given their O K on this type of crib for corn sealing.

This type of crib will cost less than any other type that can be built and covered so as to satisfy the corn sealers.

WE HAVE ONE PORTABLE CRIB ON HAND!

This crib will hold approximately 650 bushels and is a handy crib to feed from. Set it next to your feeding floor and put the excess corn in it. Or, if you want, it will pass the sealer's inspection. Your tractor will skid it any place you may want to put it.

DON'T WAIT TOO LONG ABOUT YOUR CRIB ROOM...

...the corn is made, so take care of it. Every ear saved may be worth many times more in a few short months than it is now.

For once why don't you gamble on it (if you want to call cribbing it properly, "Gambling") and store it in good water shedding cribs with good ventilation.

Painting Time Is Here!

The hot weather is past, and right now is the best time to apply paint. It sets better, and gets a chance to harden more evenly than when the hot sun is on it in the summer time.

"DEVCO TWO COAT SYSTEM" SPEAKS FOR ITSELF!

The undercoat, controlled penetration, does not let all the oil go out of the pigment into the wood. It seals the surface and prepares it for the top coat which finishes and makes the wearing surface. We don't have to call your attention to its lasting witness. Devco is not a cheap paint, but it is a lasting paint, when applied according to directions. You do not add a lot of oil or turpentine.

SEVERSKY GETS A WEALTH OF THINGS HERE

NEW YORK — In 1918, the Bolsheviks were fixing to shoot Alexander P. de Seversky, but he persuaded them to let him go. America so could get a wooden leg, a got it, also a beautiful wife, a 000,000 airplane factory, and a of flying records, culminating in a new east-west transcontinental record of 10 hours and 3 minutes, from New York to Los Angeles.

Flying for Imperial Russia in World war, he engaged in more than 100 dogfights with the Germans and dropped 13 of them. But one day they dropped him—into the Baltic. A forty-pound bomb, which had failed to release, exploded on his wooden leg, as a stupid border guard refused to recognize his papers.

Recovering consciousness later, he discovered that, while as he was, he had been clinging to a pontoon. The water was around him. Shifting his good leg over the pontoon, he made a tourniquet of his torn trouser leg. He swooned again, as a Russian destroyer picked him up. A crow-hopped the Chinese border on his wooden leg, as a stupid border guard refused to recognize his papers.

Washington received him hospitably, in April, 1918, and made him a consulting engineer for the air service. He later experienced some rough going, but the only crack-up in his career was experienced in that drop into the Baltic. He was steadily on the uplake, signing plans, flying and bringing through his factory. In 1933, designed and built an amphibious plane which made a record of 171 miles per hour. Trained in the Imperial Naval academy, he has contributed greatly to aviation engineering and design.

Several years ago, using an alarm clock and few electrical odds and ends, he made a waltzing plan swaying rhythmically with the music from below. His waltzing days were over and he found a satisfactory substitute.

SIMON LAKE, the inventor of the submarine, 72 years old, has some day to get an under-sea pe at the sunken continent of Atlantis.

Lake Out to Redeem the Submarine

In a mid-town tel in New York he is up to his knees in the prints of submarine adaptations and gadgets which he hopes will be found useful by the deep sea boulevardier. His father is 91; his grandfather lived to the age of 96 and his sister to 102, though his once red hair is white, thinks he is just now getting started in life.

His 25 basic patents alone make the submarine possible. Like many possibly most inventors, he can devise a scheme for almost anything except getting what was coming to him. So, in his general way, he is broke.

Reading Jules Verne, when was 10 years old, led him to capture a rowboat on the Toms river in New Jersey and test his steam powers in the submerged air chamber. In 1894, he made a submarine 14 feet long, with a water tank supplying compressed air. It worked nicely. In 1894, made the Argonaut, Jr., in which he cruised under the water for the sands of miles on Chesapeake Bay.

Like the Wright brothers, aroused little attention. He only got Washington interested when he telephoned to the bottom of the sea. His working submarine was through. Washington seem to care much what he so he took his invention to the main capitals. Czarist Russia made him some impressive offers but he decided they were dissolute lot and, as a respectable American business man, he wouldn't have anything to do with them.

All in all, he became fed up with bureaucrats and red tape and emigrants in general and turned to the deep sea treasure hunt. The marines, of course, destroyed more treasure than they dredged up. This troubles him, dredged up, with a oorous and energetic, with a kled, knobby weather-beaten general and friendly, he plugs alone in his hotel to redeem a submarine by making it a cargo and passenger carrier.

In the illustration we are showing a plaid, a stripe and a gay print school-girl model. These fetching fashions had their initial showing at a prevue showing of fall styles recently presented at the Merchandise Mart in Chicago.

Off to school is the young miss to the left in a clever Scotch costume. The skirt is a red and black plaid, with a matching Scotch cap and purse. The sweater is also red. "The Barber of Seville" is the appropriate name given to the gaily striped wool afternoon dress centered in the picture. The skirt is pleated and the new longer-than-formerly-shown jacket is striped in jungle green and dregs of wine (much exploited color this season). A green ascot tie completes the dress.

The peasant dress still dominates in dresses for the young for fall, as the model illustrated to the right portrays. The dress is navy blue broadcloth with splashy yellow and red flowers, over which is worn a brilliant front-laced bodice. The Scotch plaid dress pictured in the inset below is typical of present-day trends in wear-to-school fashions.

Autumn Costumes Favor Boxy Coats

Although the edict of finger-tip length jackets is general for first autumn suits, several French designers are defying this rule by introducing short, boxy ones to wear with contrasting dresses.

One of these brief coats is little more than waistline length and flares in all directions. Its roomy shoulder line and wide sleeves contribute to the carefree impression. Some striking color combinations are achieved with these jackets of light weight wool worn over wool dresses. Since mauve and violet tones continue to be popular they are being used extensively, often in alliance with blue or dark red.

The suit which has a jacket resembling an overblouse or a brief tunic is the one which designers regard with favor and which looks so much like a dress that it may be worn during cold weather under a fur coat.

IF YOU remember "Dawn Patrol" as it was first made, be sure to go to the new version that is being whipped up by Warner Brothers. There'll be the same excellent story, but we're promised that it will be twice as thrilling—if that's possible—because of improved methods of picture making.

A flying field has been laid out, the Marine sector has been duplicated, a British cast has been collected, because it is a picture of the Royal Flying Corps—Errol Flynn, David Niven, Basil Rathbone, Claude Rains, Barry Fitzgerald, Patric Knowles, among others. Ten planes of the war period have been purchased, equipped with modern engines and two types of machine guns; they'll be crashed or burned during the making of the picture.

I'm hoping that there'll be one certain improvement, and that's in the story. If you remember the original, with Dick Barthelmess and Douglas Fairbanks Jr., it ended with Barthelmess flying over enemy country, doing practically as much damage as an entire army might have. It was preposterous, and came very near spoiling a fine picture.

It's interesting, this time of year, to see what programs the big sponsors have lined up. Here's a sample of what one of the big oil companies will offer you, if you'll just switch the dial to the right station at the right time: Adolphe Menjou as master of ceremonies, Una Merkel, Jane Froman, Charlie Ruggles, Kenny Baker, Dave Brookman's 35 piece orchestra and a mixed choir of 20. There'll be film stars as guest artists each week.

Watch for the traveling marionette show which Metro will be sending about the country for the next three years, as advertising for "Marie Antoinette." The stage is 15 feet long, and the equipment includes a curtain, spotlights and sound apparatus. There is a replica of a studio set on one side; on the other, on the stage, seven scenes from the picture will be performed by the marionettes, with actual voice recordings of the actors. There are 23 puppets, each two feet tall, resembling Norma Shearer, Tyrone Power, John Barrymore, Robert Morley, and the other principals.

It's settled that there will be a sequel to "Hurricane," now that Samuel Goldwyn has put through a deal to borrow Dorothy Lamour for it. He hasn't announced whether he'll try to find a sequel for the hurricane itself.

Incidentally it's rumored that there's a hurricane in the midst of Miss Lamour's emotional life these days.

Dorothy Lamour

Martha Raye's young sister, Melodye Raye, (your comment on the name is as good as mine!) has arrived in Hollywood. She hasn't had any experience as a singer or a dancer or an actress, but Martha thinks she has talent, and is going to try to get her into the movies. What courage! When you can't swing a cat by the tail in Hollywood without hitting the sister or brother, cousin or aunt of somebody who made good in pictures, and depended on that relative's success to help them in getting a foothold.

ODDS AND ENDS . . . The most expensive radio programs on the air are those of Major Bowes, Jack Benny, Fred Waring's orchestra, George Burns and Gracie Allen, Eddie Cantor, Metro, and new Max Reinhardt variety show and new Max McCarthy . . . Metro won't be Charlie McCarthy . . . "Northwest Passage" until next spring, because of early snows in the mountains . . . Which means that about 2,000 men won't get six weeks' work that they'd have had otherwise.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Dean of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

Lesson for October 2

THE ONE TRUE GOD

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:2, 3; Isaiah 45:22, Mark 12:28-34, 1 Corinthians 8:4-6.
GOLDEN TEXT—And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart and with all thy soul, and with all thy might.—Deuteronomy 6:5.

Today we begin a series of studies which should be of unusual value, a consideration of the Ten Commandments in the light of the teachings of Jesus and related New Testament passages. It is appropriate to point out that, far from being outmoded, the Ten Commandments are really the basis of all moral law. They need a diligent re-study and re-emphasis in our day of disregard of moral standards. As interpreted by the Lord Jesus and applied to our daily living, the truth of these commandments should be brought home to every boy and girl and man and woman in our Bible schools.

The lessons begin at the right point, for the first commandment properly deals with our conception of God. What a man thinks about God determines his entire outlook on life. We begin right when we declare that there is but one God.

I. The Truth Stated—There Is One True God (Exod. 20:2, 3).

Jehovah means "I will be what I will be," or "I am that I am." (Exod. 3:14). His very name declares God to be the self-existent, eternal one. How infinitely gracious then is the use of the word "thy" in verse 2! He—the great I AM—is my God.

There are many things concerning which we do not speak dogmatically. There are even Christian doctrines about which spiritual and earnest men may honestly differ, but regarding God we say with absolute assurance and complete exclusiveness—there is but one true God. If He is what He claims to be, if God is not to be declared to be a liar, then it is beyond the realm of possibility that there could be any other God. Hear it, ye men and women of America who in an enlightened land and age bow down in heathenish worship "before the god of gold, the god of self, the god of wine, the god of success, the god of fame, the goddess of pleasure, the god of licentiousness." The pne true God says, "I am Jehovah . . . thou shalt have no other gods before me."

II. The Truth Explained.

"If God is our Deliverer (Exod. 20:2). He who brought Israel out of the bondage of Egypt is the one, and the only one who can deliver men from the bondage of sin. If you think that a sinner is not in bondage read Titus 3:3 and Romans 6:16 and then read the verses following in both passages, and not only see but follow the way of deliverance.

2 God is our Saviour (Isa. 45:22). Again note that "there is none else" who can save. "Neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved" (Acts 4:12).

It was this verse that led one of the world's greatest preachers, Charles Haddon Spurgeon, to accept Christ as his Saviour when he was just a humble lad. Perhaps some boy or girl who reads these lines may do likewise, and become a great instrument in God's hand. Teacher, perhaps the Spurgeon of the next generation will be in your class today. Win him for Christ!

3 God is Love (Mark 12:28-34). In I John 4:8 the truth is stated in all its glorious simplicity. "God is love." He not only loves us, and calls on us to love Him, and enables us to love both Him and our neighbors, but He "is love." Love is of the very essence of God's nature. He is the source of all true love. He is love.

It was for this reason that Jesus replied to the question of the scribe as He did, directing the whole life of man into love toward God and his fellow man.

It is worthy of careful note and emphasis in our teaching that the recognition and appreciation of this truth on the part of the scribe brought him near to the Kingdom of God, but not into it. He was "not far from," but he was not in it. It is terrifying to think how close men may come to entering without doing so. Reader, have you entered into eternal life through Jesus Christ?

4. God is our Father (I Cor. 8:4-6). Paul is speaking of the eating of meat offered to idols, and points out that such false gods are really nothing. This is true not only of the idols of wood and stone, but of supernatural "beings," "demons" worshiped by primitive peoples. There are such spirit-beings, active even in our day in such cults as spiritism, but, they are not divine, not true gods (v. 5).

The true God is a Father, yes "the Father," of whom "are" all things and "we in Him" (v. 6). "As there is but one God, there is also but one Lord, Jesus Christ through whom the one God has wrought all things, and through whom we also come to God. If we have Christ we have all; if we have not Him we have nothing. Is He your Saviour?"

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Describes Diet After Middle Age; Shows How Right Food Can Prolong the Vigorous Years

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

ONE of the best prescriptions ever offered for longevity was advanced by the wise man who said: In the twenties, prepare for the thirties; in the thirties, prepare for the forties; and after that—prepare for a long and vigorous old age!

That advice is well worth following, for it has been estimated that by taking into account all the newer knowledge of nutrition, it is possible not only to improve health, but to add a number of years to the normal life span.

A Man Is as Young as He Feels

It has been well said that "the age of man has small relation to his years," for it has been demonstrated, both clinically and in the scientist's laboratory, that old age is a physiological condition rather than an accumulation of years.

In grandmother's day, a woman of 50 was considered old. Today that age is regarded as young, and much of the important work of the world is being done by men and women who can see 50 only by looking over their shoulder.

Importance of Correct Diet

On the other hand, thousands of Americans are unknowingly impairing their efficiency and shortening their lives through the misuse of food. They are eating the wrong kind of food—and what is equally disastrous—they are overeating! They do not seem to realize that eating too much does not strengthen the body, but exhausts it with the labors of digestion. The surplus nourishment clogs the system and may be indirectly responsible for headache, dyspepsia, biliousness and mental dullness. Unless they change their habits of eating, they will inevitably become victims of their own indiscretions. For while it is folly to neglect the health at any age, to do so in middle life is to open the way to an early death or to an old age marred by sickness.

Keep Down the Weight

The first 25 years of man's life are devoted to growth. During this period of youth, the body usually has a large fund of reserve energy which can be called upon in times of stress. During the next 25 or 30 years, the weight should remain constant. If the diet is properly regulated, and sound habits of hygiene are followed, a man or woman will come into middle age full of vigor and with mental and physical capacities undiminished.

Unfortunately, however, the laws of hygiene and nutrition are often broken during the active middle years. As a result, bodily reserves are depleted and middle age finds many men and women near the danger line, no longer able to resist infections and the degenerative diseases.

That is why it is so desirable—if you hope to be vigorous at 50 and after—that you begin to plan for it many years earlier.

Live sensibly. Avoid overwork. Regularly take a moderate amount of exercise. Get enough sleep so that you avoid that chronic "tired feeling." Above all, eat enough, but not too much, of the foods that build and maintain health: milk; eggs; fruits and vegetables; protein foods in amounts just sufficient to meet your requirements, so that there is no excess to be eliminated; enough fuel foods to give you plenty of pep and power, but not in amounts that will cause the weight increase which many people erroneously believe inevitable during the middle years.

Curb the Appetite for Rich Foods

It is the most important to avoid overeating. For muscular activity decreases with the passing years. The middle aged individual often rides where a younger person might walk or observes active sports from the sidelines where he formerly played them with zeal. Unfortunately, however, the appetite seldom diminishes in proportion to the lessened fuel needs. That is why every individual who has entered upon the middle years should check his or her weight frequently, and promptly reduce the fuel foods if a significant gain is noted.

The protein requirement diminishes somewhat after the age of 60 for no new tissue is being built. It is, furthermore, advisable to take a large share of the protein in the form of milk and eggs.

Vegetables should be used freely and if there is difficulty in mastication, they may be finely chopped. Fresh fruits may be eaten as long as they do not cause fermentation; otherwise cooked fruits should be used instead. Contrary to popular opinion, sweets can frequently be eaten in considerable amounts without causing indigestion. Fats, however, should be used sparingly.

Hot Foods Beneficial

Hot foods are often more easily digested than cold, and it is helpful to begin a meal with hot broth, in order to stimulate the secretion of digestive fluids. A hot beverage may also be beneficial at bedtime.

It is sometimes observed that five or six small meals are more easily digested than three large ones. Each person should discover what meal schedule best suits individual requirements and then abide by it. For it is indeed true that middle age—and the years beyond—are largely what you make them!

Questions Answered

Mrs. J. A. H.—Milk, fruits and vegetables supply a large part, but not all of the minerals required by the body daily. The diet must be supplemented with whole grain bread or cereals, eggs and some meat.

HOW to SEW By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

THIS mat is made of white cotton cable cord such as you buy at the notion counter for corded seams and trimmings. The original mat from which this design was taken was made of—no one of this generation would ever guess what! Corset strings. These were once a common commodity along with collar boning, hat pins and side combs. There was quite a fad for making luncheon sets of them braided or arranged in various designs and sewn with fine stitches on the wrong side.

The design shown here is compact and, copied in rather heavy cord, makes an ideal hot dish mat. Follow the sketches for directions. Make the circles in pairs, as shown, using No. 40 cotton thread to sew them. Braid three cords together and then sew the braided strip around and around to make the center of the mat. Sew a row of the circles to the edge of this center part, then add another braided row, being careful to "ease in" the inside edge just cles and braiding until the mat is the size desired.

To join the ends of the braided rows, pull one end through the braiding to the wrong side of the mat; then trim the ends and sew them flat. It is not too early to begin thinking of Christmas gifts—and you will be wanting to make something a bit unusual for that next bazaar when it comes rolling around. NO ONE EXEMPT

There are many who think that women and the youngsters are exempt from the law requiring a hunting license. No one is exempt, regardless of sex or age, except the owners or tenants of land and their children, who may hunt on their own land without a license.

The question often asked is whether both the land owner and tenant may hunt on the same land without a license when the landowner does not live on the land. It has been held that when the owner leases his land to another, unless the hunting rights are specifically reserved, they pass to the tenant, and the owner must purchase a license should he desire to hunt on that land.

COLLEGE ENROLLMENT SOARS AT IOWA STATE

Enrollment at Iowa State College was expected to reach a new high in the college's history as 5,581 students registered for academic work on the opening day, 513 more than in 1937. Late registrations and graduate students are expected to boost the total number to well above 6,000.

"With approximately 5,600 students now registered," says Dr. Charles E. Friley, president, "it is reasonable to expect that enrollment will reach 6,000. However, between the months of September and June, we should reach a total resident enrollment of 6,700, and summer quarter sessions should bring the total to approximately 7,500 different students for this academic year."

Enrollment has almost doubled since the academic year of 1933-34, when 3,304 students registered for fall quarter.

May Boost Tax On Motor Fuel

QUESTION OF ADDING CENT TO GAS TAX WILL BE CONSIDERED

DES MOINES—The question of adding a cent to the state gasoline tax to finance secondary road improvements will be discussed in a series of six hearings to be held over the state next month.

The state now collects a three-cent tax on the sale of each gallon of gasoline. Another cent would provide more than $4,000,000 a year revenue.

Home Owners Look Forward To Further State Tax Refunds

STATE OFFICIAL PROMISES FULL EXEMPTION IN 1939

Homestead Refunds To Mean Distribution Of $12,721,000 Next Year

DES MOINES—State tax Chairman Louis E. Roddewig, Thursday said Iowans living in their own homes will receive the full 25 mills homestead tax refund again this year.

The chairman estimated the maximum payment would mean the distribution of $12,721,000 in homestead refunds on next year's property taxes. The prediction is approximately $1,000,000 higher than the volume of homestead payments returned to the counties this year.

Roddewig said the increase reflects the expansion of the assessed valuation of eligible homesteads to nearly $510,000,000, a substantial boost compared with last year. More home owners have qualified for payments next year, the chairman explained.

Second Half Distributed

The announcement of the full 25-mill refund follows the distribution last week of more than

Porter Urges Early Testing Of Grain And Legume Seeds

Farmers desiring to have legume or grain seeds tested before the 1939 planting season are urged by Dr. R. H. Porter, head of the Iowa State College Seed Laboratory, to submit them to the Ames laboratory as soon as possible.

Tests for germination and purity can be run this fall much more conveniently by the laboratory than in the spring. Porter explains that there are more than enough late samples to be tested just before planting. By testing now the laboratory distributes the load over a long period and also provides farmers who are planning to have sales during the winter with tested seed.

Under the state law no grain or legume seed can be sold as "seed" unless it has been tested for germination and purity.

MERLE SCHAEFER IN HOSPITAL FOLLOWING ACCIDENT ON CYCLE

Was Injured In Motor Cycle-Car Accident Near Garner Viaduct Sunday

Merle Schaefer, about 18 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Schaefer of west of Klemme, is a patient at the Mercy hospital at Mason City where he is recovering from serious injuries received in a car-motorcycle collision near the Garner viaduct Sunday about noon.

The motorcycle on which young Schaefer was riding collided with a car driven by Hazel Kluver of Clarion. The accident happened at the north end of the viaduct over the Milwaukee tracks west of Garner and near the point where the paving forms a "Y" north of the bridge. Merle was taking the curve to go west, while the car driven by Miss Kluver was coming from the west.

Billy Brummond, of Kanawha, was driving his motorcycle just ahead of Schaefer, but he escaped a collision by driving his machine into the ditch. He was not injured.

Merle Schaefer suffered a broken leg, a broken arm, skull and face cuts and other cuts and bruises. His condition was reported as satisfactory this morning.

Merle Schaefer is employed as a mechanic at the Klemme Auto Co. here. Miss Kluver is employed in a bank at Clarion.

Duck Season To Open October 15

DON'T WAIT UNTIL THE LAST MINUTE

Duck hunters planning to be in the marshes on the opening day of the waterfowl season should not wait until the last day to buy their 1938 hunting licenses or duck stamps. Last year a number of hunters making a last minute rush to buy a hunting license found the hardware store or other depository temporarily out of licenses due to the last minute sales which cannot be anticipated in obtaining a supply of license books. Many hunters were disappointed to learn upon arriving at their local post office that the supply of duck stamps had been exhausted. Depositories handling hunting licenses and post masters handling duck stamps try to anticipate the demand, but when hunters appear a day or two before the season opens, some of them may have to drive to other towns to get their licenses and stamps, or postpone their hunting until a new supply is received.

Battle of Thames 125 Years Ago Ended Career of a Great Red Man

Gen. W. H. Harrison's Victory on October 5, 1813, Not Only Marked the Passing Of "The Most Extraordinary Indian Character in American History" But Also Helped Make Col. R. M. Johnson, Reputed Slayer of Tecumseh, Vice-President Of the United States.

© Western Newspaper Union.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ON AN October day 125 years ago there died in battle one of the greatest Indians the American continent has ever known. His name was Tecumseh, a chieftain of the Shawnee tribe, and the engagement in which he was killed was the Battle of the Thames. This battle is not nearly so well known to the average American as a dozen others of lesser importance but its aftermath makes it one of the most interesting engagements in the history of the United States.

The history of Tecumseh begins in 1768 when the wife of Chief Puckeshinwau of the Shawnees, in the Indian village of Piqua on the Mad river near the present site of Springfield, Ohio, gave birth to twin sons. One of them was given the name of Lalawethika, referring to a dance rattle or some similar instrument. Later he would take the name of Tenskwatawa, meaning the Open Door, through which he would lead his people to a new and better life. The whites would know him as The Prophet, whose skill as a demagogue, when combined with the statesmanship and military genius of his brother, would be one of the most serious threats to white domination of the Middle West that it had ever known.

The other twin was given the name of Tikamthi or Tecumtha, meaning One Who Springs and indicating that he belonged to the clan of the Great Medicine Panther or Meteor. So the Shawnees knew him as the Crouching Panther or the Shooting Star, but history would write him down as Tecumseh.

When the twins were six years old their father was killed in the Battle of Point Pleasant, W. Va., where Andrew Lewis and his Virginia frontiersmen defeated Chief Cornstalk and his Shawnees. After that young Tecumseh was placed under the care of an elder brother who taught him the ways of warriors until this elder brother was killed in battle with the whites on the Tennessee frontier in 1788 or 1789.

A Fighting Heritage.

With this fighting heritage Tecumseh soon distinguished himself as a warrior but one who was more humane and chivalrous toward his enemies than was common among his tribesmen. He fought in two great battles of that period—at the defeat of St. Clair in 1792 and at Fallen Timbers in 1794 when "Mad Anthony" Wayne smashed the power of the Indian confederacy that had been formed by Little Turtle, the Miami leader.

Unreconciled to accepting peace with the whites, Tecumseh refused to take part in the Treaty of Greenville and gathered around him a band of young warriors who roved over the present states of Ohio and Indiana before finally settling down on the White river in Indiana about 1798. He remained there for a few years, peacefully occupied with hunting, until the continued encroachment of the whites upon the lands guaranteed to the Indians by the Treaty of Greenville aroused him to action.

On the ground that the Ohio valley country belonged to all the tribes in common, he denied the right of a single tribe to sell its lands to the whites. When the federal government refused to accept this principle and began negotiations for the purchase of more land from the Red Men, he determined to form a great confederation of all the Western and Southern tribes for the purpose of holding the Ohio river as the permanent boundary between the two races.

Undaunted by the fact that

The Death of Tecumseh at the Battle of the Thames. (From an old wood cut)

Pontiac, the Ottawa, and Little Turtle, the Miami, had failed in such a scheme, the Shawnee leader began visiting other tribes and enlisting their support. No doubt he was doomed to failure, just as the other Indian leaders had failed, but the chances are that his attempt to hold back the tide of white settlement would have come nearer realization than theirs had it not been for his brother, the Prophet.

Tecumseh probably realized that the Prophet was a charlatan but he was glad enough to have the aid of Tenskwatawa's influence over the superstitious savages in forwarding his plan. He could not foresee that the character of his twin brother might make him more of a liability than an asset to his cause. For that was exactly what happened.

While Tecumseh was attempting to enlist the Southern tribes in his confederation, the Prophet on November 7, 1811, precipitated the attack on the forces of Gen. William Henry Harrison at the Tippecanoe river which ended so disastrously for the Indians. Not only was the Prophet thoroughly discredited among the Shawnees by that defeat, but it dampened the ardor of other tribes for Tecumseh's scheme and he saw his elaborate plans crash to the earth.

Embittered by this disappointment and still unreconciled to accepting American domination over his country, Tecumseh welcomed the outbreak of the War of 1812 and cast his lot with the British as a possibility of regaining control of his ancestral lands. Nearly all of the war chiefs followed his lead and Tecumseh soon found himself the nominal head of more than 700 Shawnee warriors.

Made a British General.

Gen. Isaac Brock, commander of the British forces in the West, immediately recognized the genius of Tecumseh and made him a brigadier-general. Thus the Shawnee chieftain had the distinction of being one of two Indians who ever held such high rank in a white man's army. The other was Gen. Ely S. Parker, an Iroquois who served on Grant's staff during the Civil war.

There was a strong bond of friendship between Brock and Tecumseh which continued until Brock's death at the Battle of Queenstown in October, 1812. General Proctor, his successor, lacked all of the qualities which had won the admiration and respect of Tecumseh for Brock. Despite the aid of the Shawnee leader and the 2,000 warriors of the allied tribes which he placed at Proctor's disposal, the British leader soon proved himself such a bungler, if not actually a coward, that Tecumseh clearly foresaw the ultimate triumph of the Americans.

He covered Proctor's retreat before Harrison's army, after Perry's decisive victory on Lake Erie until he became disgusted with the British commander and, declining to retreat farther, forced Proctor to make a stand on the Thames river near the present site of Chatham, Ontario. Even then he was not sure that Proctor would fight if he could avoid it.

His low opinion of the British commander was soon justified. At the first attack by Harrison's troops, Proctor fled in his carriage, accompanied by his personal staff, a few dragoons and some mounted Indians. When the American cavalry broke the British line, Proctor's soldiers immediately threw down their arms and surrendered. Within five minutes after the first shot was fired, the British force was beaten and most of them were prisoners.

Very different was the situation when the Kentucky cavalry, the battle, Tecumseh with a presentiment of disaster, had told his friends that he would never leave the battlefield alive. So he had laid aside his British general's uniform and gone into action dressed in his native costume.

Under his leadership, the Indians stoutly resisted the onslaught of Col. Richard M. Johnson's mounted men and it was not until Tecumseh fell that the savages at last gave way.

Who Killed Tecumseh?

The slayer of the Shawnee chieftain is unknown. Since there was nothing in his dress to distinguish him from any other warrior, no one on the American side knew when he fell or whose bullet it was that killed him. But that did not prevent several Americans from claiming that "honored" In fact, the question "Who killed Tecumseh?" became a famous one in American political history.

When Col. Richard M. Johnson was a candidate for vice president in 1836, his partisans, who hailed him as "The Hero of the Thames," claimed that he was the slayer of the Shawnee chieftain, because in those days success as an Indian fighter was a strong recommendation for political preferment.

The claim of Johnson's followers was based upon the fact that during the battle of the Thames he had killed an Indian, supposed to be a chief, who had wounded him and was advancing upon him with upraised tomahawk when the Kentuckian shot the Indian with his pistol. They asserted that this chief was Tecumseh.

Johnson Claims Corroborated.

More than half a century later what appears to be a corroboration of the claims of the Johnson partisans appeared in the Century magazine. In a letter to the editor of the Century Benjamin B. Griswold of Carroll, Md., asserted that in 1842 he was present when Johnson gave an account of the incident and "remarked that for some time a doubt had existed whether the Indian killed was really the formidable chief or not; but, he added, in terms entirely unqualified, that recently developed circumstances had removed all uncertainty as to this fact. He gave no information showing what circumstances had determined his question, but simply spoke with positiveness on the subject."

This resulted in another letter, written by D. B. Cook, editor of the Niles (Mich.) Mirror, telling of an interview he had had with Noon Day, chief of the Ottawas, in 1838. He said Noon Day had told him that he was near Tecumseh when he was slain and had helped carry his body from the field. Later when Noon Day was taken to Washington by Gen. Lewis Cass to see the "Great White Father," President Van Buren, and was introduced to Vice President Johnson, he recognized him immediately as the man he had seen shoot Tecumseh at the Thames. So it seems entire probable that Johnson was the slayer of the great Shawnee leader.

Indicative of the greatness of Tecumseh is the fact that despite pioneer prejudice against the Indian, he was the subject of a poetic tribute by one of Ohio's early bards. Charles A. Jones (1815-1851) was the author of

TECUMSEH

Where rolls the dark and turbid Thames
His consecrated wave along Sleeps one, than whose, few are the names

More worthy of the lyre and song;
Yet o'er whose spot of lone repose
No pilgrim eyes are seen to weep;
And no memorial marble throws
Its shadows where his ashes sleep.

Stop, stranger! there Tecumseh lies;
Behold the lowly resting place
Of all that of the hero dies;
The Caesar—Tully—of his race;

Whose arm of strength and fiery tongue
Have won him an immortal name,
And from the mouths of millions wrung
Reluctant tribute to his fame.

Stop—for 'tis glory claims thy tear!
True worth belongs to all mankind;
And he whose ashes slumber here
Though man in form was god in mind.

What matter he was not like these
In race and color—this the soul
That marks man's true divinity—
Then let not shame thy ear control.

Art thou a patriot?—so was he!
His breast was Freedom's holiest shrine;
And as thou bendest there thy knee
His spirit will unite with thine.

All that a man can give, he gave—
His life—the country of his sires
From the oppressor's grasp to save;
In vain—quenched are the nation's fires.

Art thou a soldier? Dost thou not O'er deeds chivalric love to muse?
Here stay thy steps—what better spot
Couldst thou for contemplation choose?

The earth beneath is holy ground,
It holds a thousand valiant graves.
Tread lightly o'er each little mound,
For they are no ignoble graves.

Thermopylae and Marathon,
Though classic earth can boast no more
Of deeds heroic than yon sun
Once saw upon this lonely shore.

When in a gallant nation's last
And deadliest struggle, for its own,
Tecumseh's fiery spirit pass'd
In blood, and sought its Father's throne.

Oh, softly fall the summer dew,
The tears of heaven, upon his sod,
For he in life and death was true
Both to his country and his God;

For, oh, if God to man has given
From his bright home beyond the skies
One feeling that's akin to heaven,
'Tis he who for his country dies.

Rest, warrior, rest! Though not a dirge
Is thine, beside the wailing blast,
Time cannot in oblivion merge
The light thy star of glory cast;

While heaven yon high hills to the sky,
While rolls yon dark and turbid river,
Thy name and fame can never die—
Whom freedom loves will live forever.

Discounting the sentimentality of that poem, so characteristic of the period in American literature in which it was written, it is not an over-estimate of the man it honors. For, as James Mooney says in his sketch of Tecumseh in the "Handbook of American Indians," published by the Bureau of American Ethnology of the Smithsonian institution, "From all that is said of Tecumseh in contemporary record, there is no reason to doubt the verdict of Trumbull that he was the most extraordinary Indian character in United States history."

It Takes Two...

Life is a game you can't play single-handed, for "no man liveth unto himself."

—By WINIFRED WILLARD—

IT WAS the close of a symphony season at a regular summering place in New York. Handsome in white flannels and flushed with triumph, the conductor of the great Metropolitan symphony orchestra, 60 artists playing as one man, was acknowledging the enthusiastic applause and appreciation of his nation-wide audience.

They had been listening to this orchestra for many days with mounting pleasure. The cheering ceased to give the leader time to speak,—"It takes two to make a good concert," he said with a smile, "orchestra and audience." Real wisdom for every day living in that! It takes two for most things in life.

Christmas aboard a great ship for Panama was nightmare to me. I proved the need of two by its very absence. The passenger at table wouldn't talk, just sat and looked bored. I am sure she was. I know I was. I tried it alone, hunted between meals for something to talk about or something to get her going, things to say to break the gloomy silence that always came when she came. Whatever I said brought her maddeningly superior "yes" or her dishearteningly final "no." Perhaps our vibrations or something were inharmonious. I couldn't and didn't get far alone and the cruise was a flop because she wouldn't play her part. We both missed the zest of a great opportunity that took two.

Fun in Teamwork

Recently I was a guest in a family of five. On the porch, at the table, in the kitchen, anywhere, every day, conversation was a thrilling game that raced and ran through politics, sports, history, current happenings, religion—anywhere keen, alert minds enjoy going. Everybody, mother, father, three strapping sons and I joined in laughing, talking, differing, agreeing. Repartee was stimulating, whoever happened to be around.

It was this fine quality which the symphony conductor meant when he said to his audience, "It takes two to make a good concert." It does take two or ten, however many doesn't matter, to play the complicated game of life where each has his part and where each part needs all the others. We can't do it alone. We are done for before we begin, if we try.

A man who is significant only because he is a fairly common type, never lets you finish what you start to say. He has no patience with "it takes two." He wants to be the all and only. He cuts in on you, grabs the words out of your mouth, tells you what he thinks you are going to say, leaves you wondering where you were with your story and more than a little peeved. He makes me want to push my figurative toe into his conversational door the way the agent does, until I have finished what I was saying. He hasn't any monopoly on conversational rights. He is entitled to equal chance with what he wants to say. So am I! Only he never thinks so. And he rates as a rather high class social bore.

It is most reprehensible whenever an agent tries the trick of putting his toe in my doorway to force an entrance to my home. But I am dead sure it is justifiable, conversationally speaking, when any person breaks in and cuts my sentence in two just to make the opening bigger and bolder for himself. It takes two!

Stockholders' Dilemma

A while back in the far West, the shadow of a sheriff darkened a hospital. Stockholders owned it. But they hadn't paid much attention to its need for money. Accordingly they faced either lose or pay. One day it fell to me to travel more than 250 miles through sizzling heat across a mid-summer desert to explain to these stockholders their dire situation. Mercury stood about 105. The chairman had no notion of the hazardous stakes he was playing as he turned that group into a lawn party. Surely it was hot! Out of doors was a little more comfortable. But we were there to study a crisis.

After the chairman introduced me to the group he said, "While she talks, we will have some refreshments!" I wanted to throw back at him that it takes two to play; that this was their game, not mine; their hospital, not mine; and if ice cream was their deepest craving, I might like some too. It was as hot for me as it was for them. Instead I tried to count "ten brittle digits in a row," to calm down and to put their financial straits clearly before them. They ate their sweets. I talked my heart out. They lost their hospital. Then they cared. Life is like that.

No use talking, the single driver stands to lose more often than the double team! The man that wants to say it all and do it all and be it or later that "no man liveth unto himself" and that everywhere with everybody, you need me, I need you does call for reciprocity. It does take two to win!

NEW YORK.—This writer has always thought it would be a good idea for the newspapers of a city to make an award every year to the person who had provided them with the most good copy. In New York, I would nominate Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, for 39 years curator of mammals and reptiles at the Bronx zoo, almost any year. He has just left for Trinidad to catch some parasol ants, which he has been craving for a long time. It has been generally supposed that the ants pack leaves and petals for shade. Dr. Ditmars puts us right on that. They gather them only for food.

The curator has exploded many myths, but usually substitutes something even more interesting. Reptiles haven't the slightest interest in sweet music and aren't soothed by it, monkeys will return to cleared jungle if it grows again; the mother snake does not swallow the little ones in times of danger.

But, being thus disillusioned, we learn from Dr. Ditmars that there are sea serpents, great schools of them, in the Indian ocean and the western tropical Pacific. They are as gaudy as an Elks' parade, with cold, beady eyes, and emit a dreadful venom. Dr. Ditmars carries them on the books as hydrophobins.

There are flying snakes, fish that climb trees, fish that shoot down bugs out of the air by expelling pellets of water like an air gun, frogs that can swallow rats, frogs with vocal power 1,000 times that of a man, insects which are carried by jungle people for flashlights, animals which can travel 60 miles an hour and animals which never lie down.

Dr. Ditmars is 62 years old. At the age of 15, he began gathering insects for the Museum of Natural History. He had a year of newspaper work before joining the staff of the zoo, which may account for his being a friendly Santa Claus to reporters.

IT IS recalled that Homer Martin, the fighting parson who contends with John L. Lewis in a Faustian struggle for the body and soul of the automobile union, was the world hop, skip and jump champion just a few years ago and may be still. It is only three years ago that he quit the pastorate of the Leeds Baptist church in Kansas City, got a job in the Fisher plant, organized the local of the United Automobile Workers' union and became its first international president.

His battle soon turned from the bosses to the left-wingers of the union and that's the issue of his contention with Mr. Lewis. Getting under way, he eloquently plastered William Green of the A. F. of L. and it is not clear where he would be headed in case of a final break with the C. I. O. leadership.

He is tall, athletic—once a track star for the Illinois Athletic club—with a wide, ready smile and shell-rimmed glasses. He gets $3,000 a year for a whole lot of trouble and strife, but seems to enjoy it. He is 36 years old, born and reared on a southern Illinois farm.

THIS writer knew quite a number of early-day aviators, including Lincoln Beachey, Art Smith, Bob Fowler, Si Christofferson and others, and he always wondered why none of them ever dressed the part. They all were as drab as so many gray moths, while their role certainly called for a dash of color. One thought of the sartorial dash of d'Artagnan, Portos and Athos if they had been riding the skies.

Col. Roscoe Turner, who recently lifted the Thompson trophy at Cleveland, for the second time, winning $22,000, satisfies a long-felt want. His flying togs are modeled on the old-time pouesse cafe, calculated to give him protective coloring against a flaming sunset, but high visibility from below.

For years, off and on, he has been picking up records in pink pants and a lavender tunic, or in an ensemble blending many shades of blue, cerise and heather, with a rakish English officer's cap, ruddy face, Grover Whalen wax-tipped mustache and a couple of octaves of fine teeth. Here, as the old books on decorum would have it, is an outfit which would take you around the world.

Colonel Turner is of California background, the title being a dispensation of the governor of that colorful state.

Despite the fearsome thunderings of Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini, a paradox of war-mad Europe is that the foes of Germany and Italy have far superior military equipment.

Though Rome and Berlin may shout and boast, a cold analysis of comparative strength shows that the inevitable "allies" can eventually defeat them in a war which might last as long as two years.

This fact has long gone unnoticed. It was not brought out until a few weeks ago when Germany opened her autumn maneuvers and began looking with hostile eyes at little Czechoslovakia, whose Sudeten German minority has allegedly been discriminated against.

Though Czechoslovakia herself is weak, though even Great Britain has a surprisingly small armed force, the mighty power of Russia and France is something to be reckoned with.

Russia cannot afford to throw her entire weight against a European foe, because the threat of Japan necessitates maintenance of a good-sized force in the Far East. But the Soviet military machine is a wonder of the modern world.

In her weakened condition from the Chinese conflict, Japan cannot be considered an important factor in any current European war. The above figures on comparative military strength—furnished by the United States army and navy departments—do not even list Japan's land forces for this reason. Tokyo's only power lies in whatever "nuisance value" she might provide in Siberia to help her Fascist allies, Germany and Italy.

U. S. by Comparison.

Figures on America's military power are provided only for comparative purposes. Though the United States has abandoned her policy of complete isolation, her neutrality position is stronger than it was in the World war, when American aid was deemed necessary to crush Germany's imperialism.

Thus the lineup of great powers finds Germany and Italy on one side, opposed by Great Britain, France and Russia. Such European countries as Jugo-Slavia, Rumania and Hungary are minor factors. Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Finland have avowed their intention of escaping complications.

Here, then, are the figures. In actual army strength—including standing forces, airmen and reserves—Russia, France and Great Britain have 26,725,000 men. Italy and Germany have less than half, or 10,725,000.

Great Britain's navy is alone bigger than the combined fleets of Italy and Germany, whose tonnage is 1,107,032. Britain's 1,758,478 tons, plus 699,342 tons from France, makes an opposition force of 2,457,820 tons. Some of this naval equipment will not be ready to use for several months, but the actual ratio at the present time is about the same.

In air strength, the "allies" have 15,400 planes, while Germany and Italy together have 11,500.

A Week or a Year.

It is interesting, though admittedly horrifying, to contemplate how long a general European conflict could continue. Several years ago the Italian general staff made the rash prediction that the next war would be finished within a week. This belief was based on the rising importance of fast planes, gas, long-chemists who can manufacture "ersatz" or substitute materials of war. These products relieve them of some worry in the event of blockade, but there are certain essentials—like oil and cotton—which every nation must have to carry on successful warfare.

The discouraging inevitability of war has been growing in Europe's consciousness for five years, and out of that inevitability have arisen new methods of defense unparalleled in history. England, which is especially invulnerable to modern aircraft, has developed her "ARP" (air raids precaution) program to the point where almost every man, woman and child knows how to handle a gas mask. She has built bomb-proof and gas-proof cellars with feverish haste, constructed new coast defenses and trained expert anti-aircraft gunners.

But these precautions are minor compared to those of France, Germany and Czechoslovakia with their amazing "lines." Between 1929 and 1936, France employed 15,000 men to construct the Maginot line, a series of underground fortifications which extend from Belgium to Switzerland, aimed to protect the country against invasion from Germany.

When the September crisis first broke, France rushed hundreds of thousands of men into this line and Germany answered by hastening work on a similarly startling series of fortifications, the Siegfried line.

Aunt Tibby's Trunk

By
D. J. WALSH

Copyright—WNU Service.

"BUT, Mazie," remarked Bert Howard to his pretty little wife, "it isn't quite fair that Aunt Tibby should want to come back so soon; it's less than three weeks since she left, and she had been here six months. I have no objections to your aunt; she's a nice old lady, if a bit eccentric, but you always work so hard entertaining her that you wear yourself out. Between worrying over her comfort and fussing about the safety of that old cowhide trunk, home becomes a place of torment for me instead of a haven of rest."

And then Mazie, whose bobbed crown of glory was decidedly of the shade beloved by Titian, and with a temper to correspond, replied thus: "If you were properly interested in the welfare of your family you'd want to keep Aunt Tibby here all the time! Do you fancy that she herself would be so particular about that old cowhide trunk, as you are pleased to call it, if it didn't contain valuables? She told me—no, I won't say she exactly told me, but she gave me to understand, and I know all the family have the same impression—that in it she carries her stocks and bonds. She has bequeathed the trunk to the one in whose home she happens to die."

"Mazie!" exclaimed Bert, putting his arms around his wife, "waiting for 'dead men's shoes' is sorry business! Do what you can for your aunt without making your family unhappy, but put all such ideas as you've just mentioned out of mind; they are unworthy of you!" and Bert stopped to kiss his wife good-by.

The first evening of Aunt Tibby's arrival Mazie began, "Barbara! do sit still! You'll make Aunt Tibby nervous!" or "John! don't walk so heavy!"

Aunt Tibby had been with them several weeks when she came down with a cold. The doctor called pronounced the trouble pneumonia. "Which at her age," said he (Aunt Tibby was 86), "is a serious matter. You had better get a nurse." Aunt Tibby had been so humored by her niece, however, that the nurse could do little to suit her, and Mazie was obliged to fetch and carry, to run up and down stairs until, ten days later, Aunt Tibby sank into her last sleep.

After the funeral the relatives who had gathered from far and near demanded that the will be read at once. So the old cowhide trunk was brought down to the living room and opened in the presence of all. It contained Uncle David's army uniform, a few books, half a dozen packages of old newspapers—and a long letter written by Aunt Tibby herself. This was addressed to her relatives in general and was a sort of confession. In it she stated that her income since Uncle David's death had been limited to a pension of $6 a month. That in some way the story had been circulated that this old trunk contained valuables and she had never contra-

On the Highway

It is a curious trait in human nature that we will take off our hats when a woman enters an elevator, and be most apologetic if we bump into somebody inadvertently; but the instant we get our hands on a steering wheel we damn all mankind—woman and man alike.

Too often, we are inclined to look upon traffic guides and regulations as irritating restrictions designed primarily to keep us from having a good time, when the truth of the matter is, they have been devised solely for our convenience and comfort.

dicted it, fearing if she told the truth some one might put her in an old ladies' home, an institution she detested. She trusted her relatives would pardon her and that the old trunk would be kept for her sake; that it might prove a magic casket to the owner, just as it had to her.

The trunk was left with Mazie, as she was the only person who displayed the least desire to possess it. After everyone had departed she threw her arms around her husband's neck and cried, "Oh, Bert, can you ever forgive me?" Judging by the sigh of contentment she uttered Bert's answer was satisfactory.

Aunt Tibby was right; the trunk did prove a magic casket for Mazie. It stood in the upstairs hall where she had to pass it many times a day and whenever she was seized with envy, stubbornness or a desire for finery she could not afford, one glance at the old trunk was sufficient to dispel such feelings in a twinkling.

Yep, fall is here! And with it comes the annual hords of boxelder bugs that seem to come from nowhere and get in everywhere. And while on the insect subject, the mosquitoes seem to be thicker this fall than anytime within the memory of old timers.

The mosquitoes are so thick that farmers complain it is almost impossible to work in the fields. One farmer even wore a heavy rain coat, rubber boots, a thick felt hat and a mosquito net over his face. That didn't stop 'em. They simply sharpened up their boring equipment and perforated the coat and boots and walked right in. The farmer weighed 200 pounds before he went to the field. After the mosquitoes had their fill from his anatomy the farmer shrank to a mere 110 pounds, and as Ripley says, "Believe it or not."

Where do you want the school house built? To settle the thing to the satisfaction of everyone, one gentleman at the board meeting the other evening was campaigning quietly to have the new building mounted on wheels. Then it could be toted about to where the crabbing was the noisiest! Not bad, not bad!

Well, everybody is breathing easier this week as the war scare is apparently quieted... for a time at least or until Hitler wants another slice of the mellow to appease his appetite for more territory and more power.

Uncle Sam seems to keep out of the European affair, but this writer contends he still has his neck stuck out prominently in three dangerous places: 1 and 2: a U. S. gun boat is still in the river in a direct line between the Japs and the Chinks. Somebody might let a bomb fall and that would be too bad. And 3: Uncle Sam should clear out the oil promoters down in Mexico. They took a chance in buying the land there... what if the Mexican government did confiscate their property with promises to pay... sometime. Unless Sam should insist that U. S. money in Mexico oil industries should be given no protection whatever!

Veterinarian Says Marijuana Not Cause Of Horse Disease

Marijuana, or wild hemp, as it is sometimes known, does not cause sleeping sickness in horses, Dr. C. H. Covault, head of Iowa State College Veterinary Clinic, states in answer to numerous inquiries being received at the college.

"Sleeping sickness or encephalomyelitis is caused by a specific virus, believed to be transmitted from one animal to another by insects—probably flies," Dr. Covault explains.

"The epidemic in Iowa will subside rapidly after the first heavy frost because the insect 'vectors' will be killed. In fact, both the number and severity of cases already are declining with the coming of cool weather."

A sickness, traceable to diet, that often is mistaken for sleeping sickness, is moldy corn poisoning, according to Dr. Covault.

"Moldy corn poison often occurs early in the fall when the true encephalomyelitis is disappearing. The only way to prevent such poisoning is to keep animals away from moldy corn."

The woman who is always speaking her mind usually has none.
